Foreword

From the British Ambassador

- HE MR RICHARD MORRIS

I am pleased to know the Association of British Alumni in Nepal (ABAN) is publishing an updated Membership Directory 2016 to facilitate networking between ABAN members; and to help share the expertise they gained in the UK for the development of Nepal.

This bicentenary year of relations between Britain and Nepal is a great opportunity to take stock. As you know, our relationship has many pillars: political; military/gurkha; development assistance; people-to-people; cultural. But one important pillar that we must not forget is the educational pillar – a really important link between us. Thousands of Nepalis have completed UK qualifications. Many study at institutions with UK links. We have provided development assistance in the field of education.

And, importantly, various Nepalis have studied in the UK. I'm delighted so many want to maintain their connections with Britain and each other. Some of those who studied in Britain did so under the Chevening Scholarships scheme. Chevening Scholars and other Nepalis who studied in the UK have risen to positions of influence and contributed substantially to Nepal. We're delighted they chose to study in Britain, and that they have so willingly shared their experiences on return.

So – the two hundred year relationship between our countries gives us many things. I think the most important is a really strong foundation as we look to the future. Those who studied in the UK, the ABAN members, including the Chevening alumni, are a really important part of that. I hope you'll all continue to work with us to build a modern, forward looking, and productive partnership between our countries in the years ahead. Subhakamana, best wishes and Dhanyabad, thank you.

RICHARD MORRIS

HM Ambassador

Message

From the Director of British Council in Nepal

- DR. JOVAN ILIC

Dear ABAN Members

The Association of British Alumni in Nepal (ABAN) was formed in 1998 by a group of budding enthusiasts who were given a home by the British Council. It was formed to link professionals working in different sectors in Nepal who had the common bond of having studied in the United Kingdom. ABAN fosters cultural, educational and academic interaction between Nepali and British professionals. There are now several hundred British alumni working in Nepal.

The British Council, the British Embassy and the Association of British Alumni in Nepal (ABAN) published the first Directory of Nepali professionals who had qualified in the United Kingdom at the turn of the Millennium in 2001 with a formal launch at the British Ambassador's residence.

This all seems like a long time ago now, but this relationship between the British Embassy, ABAN, and the British Council continues to grow, so what is happening now, and why is ABAN and this relationship still so important? Well, primarily it enables returned scholars to establish contact with each other and to network more effectively thereby using the professional training and knowledge gained in the UK for the greater benefit of Nepal, and it is also of value to the UK business community. Perhaps you want to further develop contacts with Nepal and are looking for someone who has access to this local knowledge. Perhaps you need a highly trained and skilled individual to help develop your business or to exploit commercial or investment opportunities or are searching for someone with particular skills or experience that are hard to come by in Nepal. ABAN through its membership, and specifically its Directory is just such a collection of information.

By sponsoring publication of the Alumni Directory and of the ABAN Magazine, and by supporting ABAN events, the British Council continues to celebrate and to document all that is great about UK and Nepal relations. This is of vital importance for developing trust through cultural relations, and it is precisely cultural relations that the British Council was set up to do. In 1959 we began our formal relationship with Nepal with the aim of helping Nepal become a more creative, open and inclusive society, with strengthened friendly knowledge and understanding between the peoples of Nepal and the UK. This hasn't changed, nor will it.

Through cultural relations we reach out to young people in education to provide them with skills and qualifications in order to prepare them to participate in society, to gain employment and to develop as citizens. Whether this be A Level examinations, the IELTS English Language qualification, ACCA

Bicentenary of Nepal-Britain Relations

Nepal and Britain established formal diplomatic relations in 1816 AD, after the treaty of Sugauli. This treaty allowed for the exchange of representatives between the two countries. This led to the establishment of British residency in Kathmandu. Nepal formally opened its diplomatic mission in London in 1934. High level mutual visits from time to time help strengthen the ties between the two countries.

The relationship between the two countries are based on friendship, mutual understanding, and respect for each other's national interests and aspirations. The recruitment of Nepalese Gurkhas in the armed forces of Britain is the symbol of mutual trust and respect for each other. The Britain is also one of the major development partners of Nepal. It has contributed a lot in the development endeavors of Nepal through its help in human resource development in various sectors of Nepalese governance, improvement of physical infrastructures as well as in socio-economic development of rural populations through various activities. In addition, the British government also provides direct financial aid to the Nepal government to meet its development needs.

This postage stamp is being published to mark the bicentenary celebration of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Nepal and Britain.

All About ABAN

ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH ALUMNI IN NEPAL

- MAHESHWOR BHAKTA SHRESTHA
ABAN President 2015-2017

1. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

Over the past five decades, the British government has funded studies in Great Britain for Nepalese students and scholars under the schemes administered by the British Council. In recent years, an increasing number of Nepalese students are studying in British educational institutes on private funding also. The British alumni covering a wide range of specialization needed a forum for building on these studies as also to increase educational and cultural relationships between Nepal and Britain. So, an ad hoc committee was formed with eight enthusiastic British Alumni members in 1997 to establish the Association of British Alumni in Nepal (ABAN):

AD HOC COMMITTEE MEMBERS:

- Dr. Narayan Bahadur Thapa - President
- Mr. Ram Shakti Maskey - Vice president
- Mr. Ujjyal Pradhananga - General secretary
- Mr. Ramesh Shanker Palikhe - Treasurer
- Mr. Chandi Prasad Bhatta - Members
- Mr. Dilli Raj Joshi - Members
- Mr. Rabi Jung Pandey - Members
- Mr. Abin Bhakta Pradhan - Members

The Association was registered in the Chief District Officer's office Kathmandu on February 4, 1998 under registration number 547/05/55 as a non-government organization and an autonomous body, having the authority to acquire properties, collect funds etc. with rights to protect its name and property.

ABAN is now celebrating its 19th Anniversary on ABAN Day: February 4, 2017. So, it is time to look back on the journey so far in retrospect. Here is how the founders had conceived of ABAN in the beginning of the millennium:

Founder President Dr. Narayan Bahadur Thapa wrote in August 2000: "ABAN came into being with well thought out objectives.....we wished to foster cultural, academic and economic ties between Nepal and the UK. We wanted to help our members in their quest for fruitful careers while working towards national development... we specifically wanted to develop a social network of the potentially huge membership. In the first 1000 days, the members have interacted socially on a number of occasions. We have bettered our relationship with the British Council and the British Embassy. We have learnt the ongoing development process of Nepal through Talk program. We have had some inputs in the ongoing activities of the British Council providing British education for Nepalese students. I have little doubt for ABAN to make an impact, the future lies in exploring new ideas and pushing them forward. We have the talent, we have the ambition and diversity and I am certain that ABAN will make an impact".

British Ambassador to Nepal H.E. Mr. Ronald P. Nash wrote: "Since its inception in 1997, ABAN has been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs on the issues and topics of national importance and interest have been held and those have been well attended. There appears to be no dearth of talent among the ABAN members. I would like to assure ABAN of British Embassy's continued support and cooperation in fulfilling our common goals."

The British Council Director Barbara Wickham

said: "The British Council believes that ABAN is a very important organization in fostering mutual understanding and benefit between our two countries. This key group of individuals plays an important role in strengthening existing relationship and developing new ones – partnership no less important in development community than in the world of business".

2. ABAN OBJECTIVES

The Association was established to achieve the following basic objectives:

- To strengthen Professional, Educational, Cultural and other relations between ABAN members and the British Professionals,
- Take up necessary steps for proper use of special knowledge and skills acquired by ABAN members in UK for the professional activities in Nepal,

3. ABAN STATUTE

The ABAN Statute 2054.10.14, subsequently amended by its annual general meetings in 2064 and again in 2068 provides for:

6. FINANCIAL & MEMBERSHIP STRENGTHS

The Association is not a resourceful organization as its funding source is limited to membership fees, their contributions, donations, surplus of advertisement revenue in its various publications, grants from sponsors and other fund- raising activities. Financial strength is needed to support various activities/ support projects and for its sustainability. The membership fee is so low (Rs.1600 for life membership) that some contribution/ donation is sought from its members to strengthen the Association.

ABAN's audited Balance Sheets of recent years reveal that the Association had the highest bank balance of Rs.496,380 in July 2011, which was gradually diluted in the four subsequently years to Rs.289,607 by July 2015. The situation has been reversed since then:

The British Council is supporting the Association in providing meeting halls and in the publication of Membership Directory and annual Magazines. Some other activity/ project funding supports are under consideration. So, the Association has approached other social organizations to undertake support projects jointly. One such organization is Mrigendra Samjhana Medical Trust, which has agreed to provide an endowment fund of Rs.500,000/- to undertake annual support to a chosen senior citizen home in Kathmandu. Despite huge potential for recruiting new members in the Association from the large pool of British trained people in the country, ABAN's membership growth has stagnated in the recent past. Out of some 400 members enrolled, quite a number of listed members are out of Kathmandu on assignments and are not available for ABAN's activities. Nepalese students are returning home after their study in UK every year. So, a concerted effort is needed attract new members in the Association in order to enrich its professional and financial strength.

200 Years of the UK-Nepal Relations: An Account of Enduring Partnership

- BY DR SURESH C. CHALISE:
AvH, FES, UGC and LS Fellow

Former Ambassador of Nepal to the USA and the UK. Organised by Institute of Foreign Affairs (IFA), at Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Singhdarbar, Kathmandu, on 28th of December 2016

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs on the issues and topics of national importance and interest have been held and those have been well attended.

The diplomatic relationship between Nepal and Britain, which formally began following Sugauli treaty in 1816, was established due to two distinct motives: military requirements of both the countries, primarily of the latter as the treaty allowed British government to employ the Gurkhas in their military services,¹ and also the notion of the Himalayan Frontier Policy of British-India.² However, in spite of unequal and one sided in nature and content, arguably, the treaty could be seen as a testament of British longing for an enduring partnership with Nepal rather than colonising her.³ Ever since, the bond of perpetual peace and friendship,⁴ which was thoroughly altered later by the friendship treaty of 1923,⁵ has been characterized by mutual understanding, goodwill, unwavering support and cooperation.

GURKHAS AS CORNERSTONE OF BOND

As the military cooperation between the two countries persistently savoured priority, the Gurkhas obviously attained itself as the cornerstone of Nepal-Britain bilateral relations and this remains the case, particularly when one takes into account their services to the British crown. More than two hundred thousands of Nepalese Gurkhas took part in the World War I and II and about forty three thousands of them, died⁶ as heroes leaving behind, nevertheless, misery and destitution to their families. Under the aegis of the Brigade of Gurkhas, which binds its combat communities also by dint of emotion;⁷ the Gurkhas fought in the Falklands War to defend the British territory and have still been fighting in Afghanistan and some other parts of world for a peaceful and secure globe.⁸ In the Military history of the UK, they have secured a special place for them. They have not only won Thirteen Victoria Cross, a well-recognised valiant decoration in the world, but also have been able to win-over the hearts of the British crown and other royals⁹ as well. Such righteous deeds have heightened the image of the Nepalese globally as a persevering work-force. Every year, to commemorate their glory in world wars and also to pay homage to their sacrifice, the ambassador of Nepal to the UK, together with others, also places wreath in the memorial monument of the heroes at the Constitutional Hill in London.¹⁰

¹ The treaty allowed British to recruit Gurkhas in their military service. Currently, the Gurkhas account about 3% of the total British force. See for details https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Treaty_of_Sugauli. Nonetheless, Dr Watson, who, in his article, argues that Francis Buchanan Hamilton, who went to Nepal in 1802-3 and extensively travelled the Kingdom- met and served people of different walks of life, much before the treaty of Sugauli took place; was primarily responsible for underpinning the relationship at the people's level. More importantly, as Hamilton's works were not limited to Botanical matters, Watson claims that British Government later had sought Hamilton's advice on Nepal's domestic affairs, too. His book, "An Account of the Kingdom of Nepal," also is a pointer as to how he was closely acquainted with the politics and social affairs of Nepal. See: Watson Mark's article "Dr Francis Buchanan-Hamilton: Pioneer for Nepalese Biodiversity," published in 200 Years of Nepal-UK Relations: Commemorative Issue, Nepali Embassy, London, January 2014.

⁸ Under Operation Enduring Freedom (OEF), as of 23 July 2015, a total of 454 British forces personnel and MOD civilians, that includes Gurkhas as well; have died while serving in Afghanistan since the start of operations in October 2001. Of these, 405 were killed as a result of hostile action. Also, Gurkhas have served in Borneo during the confrontation with Indonesia, and on various peacekeeping missions in Sierra Leone, East Timor, Bosnia, Kosovo, Somalia and Iraq. Currently they are engaged in Afghanistan in support of the UN-authorised battle against Talibans.

⁹ On 19th of June 2010, after receiving his letter of credence, at Buckingham Palace, HMQ, during conversation with the author on Gurkha issue, had remarked, "Do you know ambassador...when my grandson Harry was in Afghanistan, he was with the Gurkhas. I have also two Gurkhas in my palace!" In addition, on return from his tour of Afghanistan, where he served alongside the Royal Gurkha Rifles, HRH Prince Harry once said "no safer place" than by the side of a Gurkha." Prince Charles, who is Colonel-in-Chief of the Royal Gurkha Rifles and patron of the Gurkha Welfare Trust, paid tribute to the Gurkhas' contribution to British history at the pageant in the grounds of the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, by saying, "In the 200 years that the Gurkhas have fought for the British Crown they have earned our nation's deepest respect and gratitude." The commemorative occasion of bicentenary of relationship was joined by HM Queen, Duke of Edinburgh and also Prince Harry. See <https://www.gwt.org.uk/gurkha-200/events>. ¹⁰ The memorial gates were inaugurated in 2002 by HMQ Elizabeth II. High Commissioners of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Africa and Caribbean and also ambassador of Nepal commemorate the armed forces of the British Empire, who served and sacrificed themselves for Britain's cause in the two World Wars.

UPGRADING OF DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS

Initially, the treaty of Sugauli had made an arrangement to have "accredited ministers" in each other's courts.¹¹ But, following the signing of new Treaty of Friendship between the two nations in 1923, the status of British Representative in Kathmandu was instantly upgraded to the level of an envoy. Later, after a decade in 1934, when Nepal established an embassy in London; the two countries subsequently exchanged Ministers Plenipotentiary and Envoys Extraordinary. The status of these representatives was further boosted in 1947 by giving them the rank of Ambassadors- Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary. These bilateral diplomatic measures were imperative to improve the relationship between two friendly and sovereign nations.

EXCHANGE OF HIGH LEVEL VISITS

The exchanges of high level visits are always instrumental in strengthening relations and furthering mutual cooperation. Principally speaking, such diplomatic rituals have been found imperative to enhance common understanding and build trust between two different nations. In this light, since the inception, as the UK and Nepal adore bilateral relationship attaching utmost importance to the bond, both the countries organised high level visits. There have been about four dozens high ranking visits from the UK as well as from Nepal's side.

On the part of the UK, the visits included the royals, senior ministers from Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), Department for International Development (DFID) and Ministry of Defence (MOD). Likewise, senior members of Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) also visited Nepal from time to time. Among the royals, HMQ Elizabeth II and HRH Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, paid official visits in 1961 and 1986, at the invitation of King Mahendra and his son King Birendra, respectively. Likewise, HRH Princess of Wales Diana visited Nepal in 1993 and HRH Prince Charles, in 1998. Of late, HRH Prince Henry or Harry's official visit, which had been made on behalf of HM's government, took place on the occasion of bicentenary celebrations. The Prince of Wales's ten-day visit has been widely considered in Nepal as an acknowledgement of the sacrifice and heroic service of the bravest of the braves and faithful Gurkhas in the process of protecting the British Crown and her people. Similarly, six visits have been carried out by DFID ministers, three by Foreign Ministers, two by Defence ministers and at least five visits by Chief of the Army on different occasions. Since British Army chief is also the Colonel Commandant of the Brigade of Gurkhas, his visit is supposed to be frequent one. In addition, there have been numerous official visits carried out also by officials from the MoD, DFID, and FCO. It would not be out of context to underscore a few important visits by special peace envoy in 2003 and special representative of the British Prime Minister for peace-building in 2010. Nevertheless, in two hundred years outstanding bilateral relationship, the British Prime Minister has yet to make his maiden trip to reciprocate Nepal side!

There were altogether four royal visits to the UK from Nepal's side. King Mahendra paid visit in 1960 while King Birendra did so in 1980 and 1995, respectively. King Gyanendra also travelled to the UK in 1981 to attend HRH Diana's wedding and also in 2003. In addition to it, historically the first and foremost visit was made by Prime Minister Jung Bd. Rana in 1850. His brother Chandra Shamsher went Britain after fifty eight years i. e. in the year of 1908. It is widely viewed that Chandra Shamsher's successive visit played a central role in bringing these two nations- hailing from two different hemispheres, even nearer. As 1923 treaty took place during the reign of Chandra Shamsher, he has also been acknowledged as defender of Nepalese sovereignty whilst British generosity also admired simultaneously for granting the same. Apart from the royal and Rana Prime Ministers' official visits, there have been significant numbers of visits accomplished by the executive heads and deputy heads of the government of Nepal. In this connection, at least three Prime Ministers of Nepal travelled to the UK, after the democratic changes in 1990. Prime Ministers Manmohan Adhikary visited Britain in 1995. Sher Bd Deoba visited twice in 1996 and 2002;

¹¹ Article eight of the nine, says "in order to secure and improve the relations of amity and peace hereby established between Nepal and Britain (East India company), it is agreed that accredited Ministers from each shall reside at the court of the other." Visit: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Treaty_of_Sugauli and KP Bhattarai in 1999. Over the past 200 years, a few numbers of visits accomplished by the deputy heads of the government, too, and the latest visit was made by Kamal Thapa in 2016, in connection with celebrating bicentenary. In addition, numerous visits have been carried out also by high ranking ministers and officials from Ministry of Defence, Judiciary, Tourism, Foreign Affairs, Home, and Finance. The regularity of these visits reflects both country's commitment to furthering bilateral relationship, indeed.

SUPPORT TO DEMOCRATIC TRANSITION

As a close friend, with which she had a special relationship primarily due to Gurkha's involvement as an essential component in her military might; the UK candidly supported Nepal's admission to the United Nations,¹² a critical political and diplomatic constituent to promote and protect Nepal's freedom and sovereignty. Britain's support for consolidating democracy has also been unflinching, especially after the democratic political changes in 1990. HRH Princess of Wales, Lady Diana's visit to Nepal in 1993 was a gesture of support in favour of nascent multiparty democracy in the Kingdom. Likewise, in these years, Britain significantly contributed in the socio-economic realms and also helped reform political, constitutional and administrative sectors¹³ in Nepal. After the King Gyanendra reclaimed sovereignty on 4th of October 2002 while dismissing the elected government, as part of the commitment of HM's government in preventing conflict and resolving them through peaceful means and also for the restoration of peace and democracy in the roof of the world; Britain sent Sir Jeffery James as a Special Representative to Nepal¹⁴ in 2003. King's decision to sack the government was widely considered as an unconstitutional step. But, the principal reason behind King's this move was that the King himself

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs on the issues and topics of national importance and interest have been held and those have been well attended.

wanted to play an active role in politics.¹⁵ The peace envoy, who was assigned the responsibility of assessing the political situation, met with the leaders of the major political parties and also the king of Nepal. He tried mainly to build confidence between the palace and agitating political parties. However, King Gyanendra's direct rule was short lived owing to the people's movement in 2006. The UK and her allies supported the consecutive political changes including the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) between the government and Maoists rebels.¹⁶ The UK, and other European governments, too, fully recognised Nepal's strategy to involve the United Nations as a global and impartial entity in her peace process. UN's involvement was imperative for the greater level of confidence not only for the primary stakeholders of the peace process but also for the confidence of international community to push the Nepalese peace initiatives forward. In addition to it, as a member of UN's Security Council, the UK lent its full cooperation in constituting United Nation's Mission in Nepal (UNMIN) and also liberally contributed to the Nepalese Peace Trust Fund (NPTF).¹⁷In similar vein in 2010, British PM dispatched a special representative to Nepal to help the peace process¹⁸ that was struggling to move-on. Of late, however, as Nepal promulgated the new constitution, the UK has welcomed it labelled it as a "significant milestone."¹⁹ and sanitation, poverty alleviation, wealth creation and so on. In this connection, DFID strategically supports institutions such as Centre for Inclusive Growth, which aims to creating an inclusive yet sustainable growth in rural Nepal. The centre is also engaged to provide legal assistance to Nepal and other concerned stakeholders, to unlock energy development contracts in order to make available a reasonable share for them on hydro resources. More importantly, the British response to the recent devastating earthquakes stands at £70 million following further commitments made at the International Conference on Nepal's Reconstruction.²³

¹² United Kingdom supported Nepal's candidature twice in 1949 and also in 1955. In 1949, as one of the P5 members vetoed against Nepal, therefore, resolution was not adopted. See: <http://edusanjal.com/blog/united-nations-security-council-meeting-about-nepals-membership-in-un-1949>. Nevertheless, all endorsed Nepal's admission to the global body on 14th of December 1955.

DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE AND ECONOMIC COOPERATION

Britain has been a long and trusted development partner of Nepal since 1950s. Educational and academic ties between Britain and Nepal started with the establishment of British Council in 1953 in Kathmandu. The relationship has grown over the years. Britain's Chevening Scholarships were offered to meritorious students for higher studies. However, on the auspicious occasion of bicentenary, it was encouraging to note that the Chevening Scholarships number had significantly been increased²⁰so is other fellowships, too.²¹Apart from this, it is reassuring that British Council has also been working to connect the UK and Nepali school sectors with an aim to enrich education of the Nepalese and promote global citizenship.²²Likewise, it is heartening to witness that, currently the UK's DFID, is the largest bilateral donor for Nepal. It has almost doubled its assistance on the eve of 200 years of relationship, which is about GBP 106 million per year. DFID, in its programmes, has include works such as infrastructure development, job creation, climate change, good governance and security, health, water ²¹ There are at least six more fellowships, other than Chevening, available for Nepalese students in various universities and colleges in the UK. They are: Oxford Pershing Square Graduate Scholarships, Warwick Chancellor's International Scholarships, Cambridge International Scholarships, Westminster Full Fee Scholarships for International Students and Westminster International Scholarships.

TRADE AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS

It is widely believed that a successful trade and commercial relations not only bring two nations politically and diplomatically closer but also helps in squeezing the irritants which could be potential for regional conflict.²⁴ So is the view of US secretary of State, nonetheless, her emphasis was more on social change and economic diplomacy. She once said, "Economic diplomacy is a powerful and vital way to shape political and social change by generating economic development."²⁵ The UK and Nepal have also recognised the significance of trade and commercial relations in strengthening bilateral ties. In this regard, some initiatives are being taken,²⁶ and attempts have been made to organise the exchange of trade delegations from both sides over the past few years.²⁷ These interactions and connections between the SMEs have furthered economic ties between the two countries.²⁸

²⁷ UK's governmental institutions such as FCO and UKTI (United Kingdom Trade and Industry) also encouraged such trade and commerce related visits on numerous occasions. <http://test.nepalnews.com/index.php/economy/8-news/News-in-Brief/13713-uk-trade-delegation-to-visit-nepal-next-week>

Britain is one of the major trading partners of Nepal. The volume of trade between the two countries seems gradually expanding over the past few years since it has surged from Rs. 980666 (export) and 8827202 (import) in 2001 to Rs. 1,924,334,331 (export) and Rs. 2,677,463,138 (import) in 2013. It is an increase of Rs 1,923,353,665 in export and Rs. 2,668,635,936 in import, respectively. Moreover, the statistical figures between years 2001 to 2006 illustrate that there had been almost alternatively negative and positive balance of trade between the two nations. Nevertheless, in recent past years, i. e. from 2007 to 2013, the trade balance of Nepal against the UK has been going continuously negative. Although, since inception of diplomatic relationship, the UK and Nepal have maintained their mutual bond on social, political, military and cultural fronts; but the trade and commercial relations have yet to keep the pace.

PEOPLE TO PEOPLE RELATIONSHIP

It is said that the first settlement of the Nepalese community in London was made at 145 Whitfield Street in Camden in 1965. In this effect, a memorial plaque now stands on the site.²⁹ Their presence significantly increased after 1990s. During this period, not only the Gurkhas,³⁰ but economic and professional migrants, besides the Nepalese refugees; also started settling in the UK. It is estimated that people of Nepalese origin have settled in all regions and their population is projected to be about 80,000 in the UK by the end of 2012.³¹

The UK, as society, has been viewed as a cultural mosaic. The elasticity in her socio-political and cultural structure has meaningfully made rooms for multiculturalism. Thus, the presence of the Nepalese, at different strata in British society, has been an integral part of acculturation process.³² In recent past, partly due to cultural interactions and also partly because of exchanges of values related to lifestyle; the Nepalese are getting mixed-up with other communities living in the UK. Particularly, British and Nepalese community's socio-cultural interactions take place through a few but effective informal and formal social institutions. Among them are the Nepalese Embassy, Brigade of Gurkhas- wherein major Nepali festivals including Dashain, take place; Nepalese restaurants, and Funfairs organised by both the cultural groups in the UK. Nevertheless, British leader's graceful participations in the Nepalese people's socioeconomic and cultural endeavours,³³ also has reinforced the exiting linkages at the people's level. On the other hand, British tourist's annual visit to Nepal in a big number and their stay in the Himalayan nation, too, is responsible for heartening the process of exchanging socio-cultural values between the two communities. The social as well as emotional bond at the level of two communities get extraordinarily boosted by some of the royal visits,³⁴ as well.

Of late, the populace of the Nepalese origin have started contributing to security and other socio-economic and health sectors in the UK. Most of them have invested in the restaurant and real-estate sectors. Some of them contribute also to the health domain as Doctors and professional nurses. In recent years, it is encouraging to note that the Nepalese are being elected as people's representatives in a number of counties. Currently, they have bagged as many as six seats as the mayor and also Councillors in different parts of the UK.³⁵ In other words, their popularity among British voters is steadily surging. There are more than one factor responsible for it and one important among them is that British voters fully recognise Nepalese people's huge sacrifice for their causes. Their image, as the hard working human-capital and loyal to the society, was evident too in London riot in 2011, in which not a single Nepali émigré found involved!

³² When two or more cultural groups come in contact, subsequently they exchange values, norms and folkways, too. Symbols of acculturation process between British and Nepalese could be noticed among different groups and at various levels. For example, in the Brigade of Gurkhas, Kaalo-Mashu (well-done black mutton meat) and songs like Yo Nepali Sheer Uchali.. Sansarama.. Lamkanchha (We Nepali, with raised heads, move-forward all over the world), are famous among British personnel. Likewise, many Nepalese in the UK now perform marriage rituals in English fashion. ESPRIT IN BILATERAL RELATIONSHIP

Nepal is the first country to have diplomatic ties with the United Kingdom from South Asia. But, after India's independence, Britain was no more a big neighbour for Nepal.³⁶ Nevertheless, Nepal's geo-political location, majestic Himalayas, flora and fauna, friendly people and cultural heritage sites have always been an attraction for the British people.³⁷ It was a happy coincidence that, as London had begun celebrating Queen Elizabeth II's coronation,³⁸ the same morning media widely reported about the news of first ascent of Mount Everest by Edmund Hillary and Tenzing Norgay. The news added as a jovial essence on the happy occasion of coronation. Ever since, HM Queen Elizabeth II, adore this day of her enthronement along with first ascent of Mount Everest. As a gesture of her love and respect for the special day, HMQ not only enjoys giving audience to the related people but also attends the associated functions. During a reception to celebrate the 60th Anniversary of the ascent of the Mount Everest, at the Royal Geographical Society in Kensington, west London; HMQ personally met with Nepal's Sherpa mountain climber Jamling Norgay, son of Tenzing Norgay.³⁹ On the occasion of diamond jubilee of scaling of Mount Everest, she also wrote to the President of Nepal. HMQ, in her message, said, *"On the 60th Anniversary of the first ascent of Mount Everest I wish to send my warmest regards to the Government of Nepal and re-affirm the strong ties that exist between our two countries. The news of the successful ascent reached me at a particularly memorable time, the day before my Coronation. The Everest Expedition was an historic example of UK-Nepal co-operation and I hope that the special relationship between our two countries will continue to grow in the years to come."*⁴⁰

The relationship has got diversified and enriched in the course of two century. Even, precisely during cold war era, which had adverse global political climate, the relationship deepened unhindered. Nepal and Britain have been cooperating with each other on numerous occasions. The Gurkhas, under the command of British Crown, not only defended the British territory in Falkland war but also has been fighting wars in different parts of the world for a noble cause of peace and stability. On the other hand, the UK has always been on Nepal's side through her thick and thin as she underwent socio-political transformation in an unprecedented way. The bilateral relations- as it continued to grow; have catapulted into multi-faceted engagements. Of course, it has been possible through historical ties, development assistance, continued military cooperation and an enduring support for democratic peace in Nepal. In contemporary world order, their relationship has been boosted further also because of pressing transnational challenges. As the existing global challenges such as terrorism, cybercrimes, climate change, drug trafficking, deadly diseases etc., need concerted efforts of intercontinental alliance of all nations- be it small or big, developed or least developed; Nepal and the UK have recognised them as shared challenges and cooperate with each other in a number of bilateral as well as international podia, including that of the United Nations.

In the meantime, Nepal's immediate neighbours are rising economically and also militarily. This has, mainly due to geopolitical location; suddenly graduated Nepal's eminence in the diplomatic domain of the region and also beyond. It is indeed a blessing in disguise for a least developed country Nepal, as coincidentally, of late; Britain's interest has also considerably ascended evocatively in South-Asia region. Now, her economic ties have substantially heightened with the world's two affluent economies and also the largest markets as Britain receives huge investments from them.

⁴¹Explicitly, after the Brexit verdict, the UK is likely opting more independent trade and political relations in the Asian continent. Additionally, as globally, realms of industry, defence and other vital governmental organs are increasingly reliant on modern Information Technology system; security challenges have also accordingly enlarged in recent years. In such a political, economic and security situation, coupled with growing cybercrimes in the region⁴² and also in Nepal; ⁴³the UK and Nepal could ponder over some new areas of cooperation also in the cyber technology field.

Conclusively, one can safely comprehend that the relationship between the UK and Nepal has been varied and strengthen significantly over 200 years. Bilateral level engagements have bolstered the relations at the government and also at the people's levels. Now, as both the nations celebrate their bicentenary, it is high time for them for stocktaking and envisioning as to how they could work in-concert to take the relationship to the next level. In this context, it would be apposite to talk about a shared gift between the two nations. In 2014, they happily agreed and established Consultation Mechanism ⁴⁴ on the great occasion of bicentenary. As the bilateral body of consultation is in operation⁴⁵ and the third of its meeting is to be held again in Kathmandu in coming months; Nepal and the UK should seize the opportunity to develop concrete strategy for future cooperation. However, it has been ventured here to explore some of the areas, which could be helpful in taking the relationship to a new height.

Probable New Areas of Mutual Cooperation:

1. Social integration of the Nepalese, including that of the Gurkhas, in the UK through appropriate measures such as jobs, social security, trainings and orientations on British language and culture.
2. A sizeable percentage of British-Nepalese, who being in the UK, are exposed to the world's better knowledge and technology. In the meantime, they have also developed commercial and trade linkages, in both countries. These sections of human capital should be encouraged not only for the initiatives for transfer of knowledge and technology into Nepal but also to develop Business to Business relationship. In this connection, British SMEs and Non-Resident Nepalese (NRN) organisations could be strategic resources for furthering the ties.
3. The major joint ventures, as of now, are in the areas of tourism, banking sector, education, tea, readymade garments, Bio-technology, consultancy sectors and so on. These sectors and others, too, in addition to energy security; require cyber security as well. They need to be equipped with advance technology and innovation. Such course, if taken, shall attract more joint ventures in other areas as well as that would enhance the level of confidence of the investors.

Especially, in the tourism sector, as it has been recorded that about 30-40 Thousand British tourists visit Nepal annually; both the governments need to make sure of the tourists' air and land safety.

4. As Nepal is struggling to recover from the woes of a decade long conflict and earthquake disaster, she deserves a continuation of present volume of development assistance from the UK government, which may be provided, as far as possible, through the government of Nepal's channel.

5. However, Nepal side, too, requires taking care of DFID development assistance by dint of good governance and transparency measures.⁴⁶

6. Reassurance for the Nepalese products in the UK markets as there has been a trade imbalance between two countries. A British FDI in this effect, under bilateral arrangement, could be a strategic move on the part of the UK to lessening the exiting trade shortfall of Nepal.

7. Establishment of Research Foundation, as a bilateral tool, in the name of Dr Francis Buchanan Hamilton, which will work for the conservation of ecology and environment in Nepal.⁴⁷

8. Britain, which is one of the best developed e-business in the world, ⁴⁸could help Nepal in addressing the challenges of cyber-security in various domains and make Nepal one of the secure places to do business.

9. British Prime Minister's visit to Nepal has been due since 1816! ⁴⁹Specifically, this category of visit shall enormously reinforce our subsisting bilateral ties at all levels.

⁴⁶ The International Development Committee (IDC), a parliamentary committee of the UK that monitors the performance of DFID, said in its report referring Nepal, "spending will only be justified if governance improves." It is also reported in the newspapers. "UK should cut aid to Nepal if "endemic" corruption persists: report". Reuters. 27 March 2015. Retrieved on 16 May 2015.

⁴⁹ During the conference with the Nepali Ambassador to the UK, at the parliamentary building, Westminster, in 2010, one of the members of All Party Parliamentary Group on Nepal (APPGN), expressed his surprise and remarked, "Is not it so shocking that our Prime Minister has not visited Nepal in two hundred years!" Later, as, in certain political sections, opinion continued for PM's visit to Nepal; APPGN, headed by Sir John Stanley, on 29th of May 2013, unanimously requested the PM Cameron for his visit to Nepal on the occasion of Bicentenary. Likewise, a number of members of Parliament also personally wrote to the PM in that effect. PM, in reply to the APPGN on 14th June 2013, expressed his desire to visit Nepal in future. He, however, said, "I have asked that my office take note of the APPG'S suggestion for future consideration." In his post-script, the PM further writes, "I would love to go: it is a question of fitting it into a ..packed schedule..." 200 Years of Nepal – UK Ties

Nepal's integration in the global market has a long history, one in which Gurkhas played a pivotal role

- DEEPAK THAPA

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs on the issues and topics of national importance and interest have been held and those have been well attended.

The end of 2016 brings to a close the bicentenary of the establishment of the diplomatic ties between Nepal and the United Kingdom. Granted that the Treaty of Sugauli of 1816 was actually signed between Nepal and the British East India Company with Imperial Britain having taken over from the Company only after the latter's disastrous handling of the 1857 uprising in India, the earlier date serves very well as a marker of the historical links between the two countries.

The relation is significant for a number of reasons. For one, it laid the basis for the creation of the Rana client state in Nepal for the British. Second, it facilitated the export of sturdy young men from Nepal to fight the British Empire's war around the world. Third, in acknowledgement of that contribution of men, particularly in World War I, the 1923 Treaty of Friendship was signed, which granted Nepal recognition by a world power as an independent country.

Nothing, however, symbolizes the ties between the two countries than the humble Gurkhas. It was brought home yet again in December 2015 at the ceremony that kicked off the 200 years' celebration. Addressing the reception, the British Minister for State for Asia, Hugo Swire, said "as the son-in-law of a former Gurkha Officer, Nepal is particularly close to my heart...."

IMPACT ON NEPAL

Studying the papers squirreled away by Newar merchants in the erstwhile trading town of Bandipur, American anthropologist Stephen Mikesell has written about how the forces of mercantile capitalism represented by the East India Company had penetrated the hills of Nepal even by the early years of the 19th century. It is not clear if that would have happened as part of the natural course of events, or if the Treaty of Sugauli provided in roads into a new market, or it was a combination of both. What is without doubt is that the monetization of the Nepali economy would not have been possible without all those Gurkha soldiers bringing back hard currencies to Nepal.

Not much is known about the early economic impact of recruitment of the Gurkhas into the British service. We have to fast forward to 100 years later, to the immediate aftermath of World War I for a better understanding of the kind of transformation this arrangement wrought on Nepali society. The first of the five volumes Ties Bakhat Ko Nepal (Nepal of Those Days) by Bhim Bahadur Pandey provides a detailed account of what happened at the time.

ORIGIN OF DEPENDENCY

According to Pandey, the 200,000 Gurkhas who fought in World War I brought back an average of 500 Indian rupees. This totaled around 130 million rupees nationally, which would translate to around 13 billion rupees at the time the book was published (in 1982). For a country that could only sometimes raise an annual revenue of around 10 million rupees or so, that represented a huge influx of capital into the Nepali hinterland- of the kind never seen before.

As they made their way up the trails literally distributing money, porter wages rose, the gaine minstrels began to receive money, eateries were established everywhere and the Thakali owners became rich. It was not only money that entered Nepal with the lahures, but mannerism, all kinds of goods, styles of eating and dressing, and ways of thinking, all of which represented the entry of influences from across the seas into Nepal for the first time. The favoured phrase among the lahures was "Damn Fool". Village damsels learned how to smoke, strike a match and kiss in the western style, write Pandey.

And, as today, when remittances contribute a bulk of our GDP, a 100 years ago, land prices rose drastically since lahures had so much money to spend on any and everything. Thus, writes Pandey, land prices increased since even the cost of a small piece of land began to exceed savings made over generations. Further, instead of findings ways to make productive use of the money brought by the lahures by divesting it towards the little indigenous income generating industry that existed such as cash cropping, anima husbandry, or a few cottage industries, seemingly to increase customs revenue the Rana regime granted permission to merchants to set up shop in the main border points and allowing never-ending influx of consumer items into the country.

Pandey lists an eclectic mixture of items increasingly found in the market: Japanese tennis shoe, gowns, blankets, saris, bangles, cigarettes, beads, coconut, betel, matches, utensils, garam mashala, etc. He argues that the entry of these readymade goods led to the demise of small home grown industry Nepal had at that time, and concludes that was the most damaging impact of World War I on Nepal. Mikesell arrives at a similar conclusion from studying the books kept by merchants in the same region of Nepal that would have informed Bhim Bahadur Pandey's observations. He writes that the community in Nepal became increasingly mediated by the bazars and merchants representing foreign industrial capitalist interests and mercantile profit..." The integration Nepal into the global market is thus of long provenance and playing the most pivotal role was the lowly Gurkhas, a fact that certainly deserves more attention than given to it so far. After all, it is 200 years since that process began.

My Education & Work Experience in UK

- DR. MRIGENDRA RAJ PANDEY

1.. STUDY AT CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE (before going to UK)

I was one of the two students who passed the Intermediate of Science (I. Sc.) Examination from Tri Chandra College affiliated to the Patna University of India in 1947 in First Division, which was a rare achievement in those days. I

2. WORK WITH DR. EDDY AND DR. TAYLOR

After completing my study in Calcutta Medical College, I came back and reported to Dr. Raghubar Vaidya, the then Director General of Health Department. I was deputed to Health Assistant Training School, a project supported by World Health Organization, and worked with British doctors Dr. Eddy (Public Health Expert) and Dr. Taylor (Sanitarian). They highly respected me and offered all help.

3. SELECTION PROCESS TO MRCP IN UK

When I was working at Bir Hospital as a medical officer, a scholarship under the Colombo Plan was made available to Nepal to study for the Membership of the Royal College of Physicians (MRCP) degree in the United Kingdom. I applied for the scholarship and was selected jointly by the Government of Nepal and the British Embassy, Kathmandu. Since I was already a government employee, I was granted three years and nine months leave of absence for DTM&H and MRCP study in UK.

4. TRAVELLING TO UK

My first travel to UK was by British Airways super constellation airplane with 5 stops, from Calcutta via Karachi- Baghdad - Istanbul - Rome and landed at Heathrow Airport on the 10th of February 1957 at midnight. My first impression of London was that it looked all dark in the morning. Epidemic of respiratory diseases, like chronic bronchitis and its complications was very common at that time due to air pollution. This was the after effect of the famous London Fog of 1954, which caused big epidemic and killed thousands of people.

The first few nights I spent at Kenilworth Hotel at Great Russell St. London. I was very impressed by the ambience there at breakfast time with Ties.

5. TRAINING IN THE LONDON SCHOOL OF HYGIENE AND TROPICAL MEDICINE

Teaching was superb at London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. In Calcutta Medical College, I was a good student and had received several prizes and medals. Teaching method in London School was more advanced and I loved it. I completed DTM&H with distinction in 1957 July, and my contact with the School continued for decades and I was invited to the special centenary of the institute as a Special Guest. After DTM&H, I had short course training in some of the best institutions in UK like Queen Square for Neurology, National Heart Hospital for Cardiology, Brompton Hospital for Chest Disease and Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh for General Medicine.

6. IMPRESSED BY MR. B.P.KOIRALA

I had an opportunity to meet Dr. B.P.Koirala at Claridgens Suite on his return after leading the Nepalese delegates in the UN General Assembly in September 1958. We had open discourse with him and I was impressed by his warm gesture, clear views, friendliness and openness.

7. MRCP EXAM AND THE SUCCESS IN FIRST ATTEMPT

I passed the MRCP examination in the first attempt, which was a rare achievement those days. I was the first Nepali to successfully complete the MRCP. It is not a time-bound program as such. Whenever you fulfill its requirements and pass the tough examination, you can earn the degree.

Having completed the MRCP course in 15 months, I was left with 21 months of my government-sanctioned leave, and I utilized this unused leave period to gain work experience as a Middle Grade Registrar in UK hospitals. With the practical exposure and opportunity to learn many new things, it greatly enhanced confidence in my profession.

Nepalese ambassador in London was so very pleased and honored with my success in MRCP that it wired the good news to Foreign Office in Kathmandu.

8. WORKING EXPERIENCE IN LONDON

Under the advice of British Council Medical Advisor, I worked at the hospital for practical experience for 19 months. The first place that I applied for was the post of Registrar in Plymouth General Hospital. Dr. William Lister, consultant physician, selected me for the post instead of other competing British doctors.

The practical exposure and opportunity to learn many things in the hospital greatly enhanced my confidence. The atmospheres of working, learning and teaching were all superb. The social side was very interesting too because I greatly admire the lovely natural environment of Devon and Cornwall area. I also greatly appreciate the magnanimity of British fellow doctors and officials to show respect and give honor where it is due.

The 19 months work experience in UK within the allowed leave period was enough for me to gain much needed practical experience in advanced systems of UK and then came back to serve the nation as the first MRCP doctor in Nepal with British work experience. I did not over stay in UK even for a single day and resigned the lucrative job to return to Nepal.

9. STARTING MEDICINE

DEPARTMENT IN BIR HOSPITAL

I returned to Nepal in 1959 as the first internist trained in the UK that boasted leadership in health delivery to its citizens in an environment of affluence and rapid progress. Britain then was in the forefront of biomedical progress and competition, at par, if not ahead, of the United States. Rest of the Western Europe looked up to the British National Health Service with a sense of awe and envy. My return to the native land planted the seed of advancement of modern medicine in Nepal, which I have been practicing till this day.

10. ESTABLISHMENT OF ICU AND CCU IN BIR HOSPITAL

In the advancement in modern medicine, my unwavering perseverance and eventual success in establishing the first Coronary Care Unit (CCU) in Bir Hospital, despite the overwhelming opposition and resistance from the so-called advocates of public health, has been no less noteworthy. Medical fraternity began to understand for the first time what an intensive care provision means to the intensely sick patients. In terms of progressivism in medicine, Bir Hospital CCU and ICU (Intensive Care Unit) was at the time was one of the very few in the entire South-east Asia region. As Head of the Department of Medicine and Cardiology, I took the initiative to start ICU, CCU in Bir Hospital in 1974 and all my colleagues and the Hospital Administration contributed to this effort from their respective places. It fulfilled a long-felt need in the hospital and became very popular and earned high regard from patients and the public alike. One of my treasured memories is also the beginning of Post - graduate medical education program in Nepal with the help of consultant from the Royal College of Physicians, UK.

11. SERVING KING MAHENDRA

When HM King Mahendra suffered from first heart attack in the wilderness of remote Kanchanpur in Far West Nepal in 1968, we managed to reach the jungle camp. After an adventurous flight and landing at Mahendranagar Airport, which had no night landing facility, we reached the Jungle camp on the third day of the attack. The King was lying flat in a Machan near the top of the tree. We took the Electrocardiogram and confirmed the diagnosis of heart attack and started the available latest treatment of the time at the Machan. British Dr. William Lister, a retired senior consultant, was in a visit to Kathmandu. I invited him to visit Kanchanpur

Jungle camp along with me to look after the King with the consent of royal family and the Government. The then British Ambassador was so very pleased with me that he honored me with special invitation.

After a few months, I accompanied King Mahendra to London for regular check up, which continued till his death. The king was treated in London Post Graduate Medical School and National Heart Hospital. Involvement of Dr. Oliver, a lipid expert from Edinburgh in checking the king in London created some resentment in London hospital, probably for the rivalry between Edinburgh and London colleges.

12. HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II HONORED

ME WITH CVO (Commander of Victorian Order). I have also received highest honors from the Government of Nepal like Om Ram Patta, Trisakti Patta Class I, Gorkha Dakchhin Bahu Class I etc.

In 1969, I was awarded FRCP (Fellowship of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh). In the year 2002, the President of the college invited me as a special guest. I was interviewed for several hours, which was recorded in audio-visual format for inclusion in the college Archives. The Archives contains among other material, a collection of such records on distinguished fellows dating back to three centuries. They might have decided to include me in the list because I was the first Fellow of the college from Nepal with good academic records including the honour of Fellowship of Public Health (by Distinction). I was one of the few persons from a developing country to be honored as such.

13. RELATION WITH CROMWELL HOSPITAL

Cromwell Hospital, London honored me as Honorary Consultant in July 1997. King Birendra used to have regular check up there after he had heart attack in 1998. King Birendra used to have his annual check up by the specialists at the Cromwell Hospital.

14. PRESIDENT OF ROYAL COLLEGE OF EDINBURGH DR. PETRIE'S VISIT TO NEPAL

President of Royal College of Edinburgh Late Dr. J C Petrie visited Nepal on our invitation accompanied by other experts. Apart from having continuing medical education program for postgraduates in collaboration with the College even after my retirement from Government service has given me personally a great sense of satisfaction. Late Dr. Petrie, Mrs. Petrie and Dr. Clark had an opportunity to visit Pokhara for an audience of King Birendra, besides the lectures, training and interactions he had with Nepalese doctors, fellows etc.

Some Facts About Nepal Britain Relations

A. BACKGROUND:

Nepal established diplomatic relations with the United Kingdom in 1816. Ever since, friendship, mutual understanding and respect for each other's national interests and aspirations have characterized relations between the two countries. The Treaty of Sugauli (1816) provided for the exchange of accredited Ministers to each other's court (Art. VIII). This arrangement continued until 1923 when a new Treaty of Friendship between Nepal and Great Britain was signed and the status of British Representative in Kathmandu was upgraded to the level of an Envoy. In 1934 Nepal established a legation in London and the two countries exchanged Ministers Plenipotentiary and Envoys Extraordinary. The status of these representatives was promoted in 1947 to the level of Ambassadors, Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

D. DEVELOPMENT AND ECONOMIC COOPERATION

British fellowships to Nepal began from 1950s and financial assistance in 1961. British volunteers have been engaged in Nepal since 1964. These programmes have contributed to addressing Nepal's need for trained, specialized manpower and developed important links between the two peoples.

British assistance generally comes now through the Department for International Development (DFID) in the form of an Umbrella Agreement. Its emphasis is on the reduction of poverty in developing countries. The DFID opened its office in Kathmandu in March 1999.

The British aid through DFID for the year 2000/2001 was to the tune of £18.52 million, followed by £22 million in 2002, £35 million in 2004, £47 million in 2005-06, £48.8 million in 2007/08 and about £58 million spent for the year 2008/09.

Different socio-economic activities in Nepal have benefited from British government assistance. Reducing poverty and social exclusion and thus contributing to a lasting peace have been the principal focuses of this assistance, which include governance reforms; improved basic services for poor people (including basic education, health, water and sanitation, agriculture and rural infrastructure); and peace building and conflict resolution activities.

In terms of sectors, Nepal has received British aid in agriculture, transport, local development, communication, education, administration, health, water supply and forestry.

A technical cooperation agreement to strengthen the traditional Nepal-UK collaboration was signed on 31st May 1994. This agreement stipulates the roles and responsibilities of the two governments regarding British technical cooperation and the British Council activities.

E. PEACE AND DEMOCRATIC PROCESS

The British government has continuously been supporting the cause of democracy in Nepal. It has recognised the people's movement of 2006 and consecutive political changes including the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA) between the government and Maoists rebels. The UK government, like that of other European governments, deems that the presence of UNMIN in Nepal is imperative for the greater level of confidence not only for international community but also for the primary stakeholders of the peace process. As a member of UN's Security Council, the UK has been, besides to the democratic changes taking place in Nepal, extending all possible help to see Nepal's ongoing peace process is logically concluded.

The total commitment of the British government for the peace process, through Department for International Development (DFID), has reached £5 million in 2010. The UK provides support to the Nepal Peace Trust Fund (NPTF), which is major funding basket for supporting the integration and rehabilitation of the Maoist combatants as well as to the constitutional mechanisms such as truth and reconciliation commission and election processes of Nepal.

F. BUSINESS AND COMMERCIALS RELATIONS

The United Kingdom is among the top ten trading partners of Nepal. In 2009 Britain stood as the fifth largest destination for Nepal's exports and seventh largest in imports with a total volume of trade Rs. 7929 million. Major Nepali exports to the United Kingdom are woolen carpets, handicrafts, ready-made garments, silverware and jewellery, leather goods, Nepali paper and paper products.

Nepal's major imports from the United Kingdom include copper scraps, hard drinks, cosmetics, medicine and medical equipment, textiles, copper wire rod, machinery and parts, aircraft and spare parts, scientific research equipment, office equipment and stationary.

While the trade has steadily risen between the two nations over the years, the balance of trade has alternatively been negative and positive until 2006 but in the recent past years the gap has been widened showing negative balance in Nepal's favour consecutively. The following figures show pattern of Nepal's trade with the United Kingdom during the past few years:

YEAR	VALUE IN '000 RS.
	EXPORT	IMPORT	TRADE BALANCE
2009	1,471,332,867	10,962,627,877	-9,491,295,010
2010	1,292,168,947	2,603,242,134	-1,311,073,187
2011	1,477,383,007	2,192,260,006	-714,876,999
2012	1,318,011,391	1,786,677,499	-468,666,108
2013	2,058,040,697	2,687,625,794	-629,585,097
2014	2,280,733,483	3,000,563,645	-719,830,162
2015	2,636,773,424	1,690,054,122	946,719,302
2016	1,256,018,669	1,398,201,525	-142,182,856

Exchange of visits by trade delegations has added a new dimension to the economic ties between the two countries.

TOURISM

A sizeable number of British tourists visit Nepal every year for trekking, mountaineering and other leisure activities. In the year 2004, a total number of 24,667 British tourists visited Nepal whereas the number grew to 36,759 during year 2014. The following figures indicate the annual tourist arrivals (including percentage of the total) from Britain to Nepal for the last few years:

YEAR	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
Number	24,667	25,151	22,708	32,367	33,658	35,382	35,091	39,091	41,294	35,668	36,759

JOINT VENTURE:

There are some British joint ventures in Nepal in the areas of hotel, resorts and restaurant business, tourism, travel & trekking, software packaging, readymade garments, hydro-power, biotechnology consultancy etc. The British investment in Nepal -- including under construction, licensed and approved projects -- has been to the tune of around Rs. 3669 million as of mid April 2008.

An agreement on the Promotion and Protection of Investment between Nepal and the United Kingdom was signed on 02 March 1993.

G. BRITISH GURKHAS

The Nepali nationals' recruitment into the British army officially started on April 24, 1815, after the Treaty of Sugauli between Nepal and the British India was concluded in 1814. Subsequently, a large number of Nepalis were taken into the British Indian Army. After the independence of India, the recruitment of Nepali nationals was organised under the Tripartite Agreement of 1947 among Nepal, India and the United Kingdom. This agreement paved way for the distribution of the then existing Gurkha Brigades serving between India and Britain. Thus the 2nd, 6th, 7th and 10th Gurkha Rifles became part of the British Army while the rest were retained by independent India.

A gradual decline of the British Empire after the Second World War and the emergence of a changing pattern of global power relations, particularly in the late 1980s, led to the downsizing of the British Army. Since the handover of Hong Kong to China in June 1997, the strength of the Nepalis in the British Army has been reduced to 3,500. There are about 27,000 pension holders, 10,000 welfare recipients and 11,000 non-pension holders.

British Gurkha soldiers are a fully integrated part of the British Armed Forces. They constitute an important element of Nepal-Britain relations. Over 160,000 Gurkhas were enlisted in the Gurkha Brigade and other units of the Indian Army during the First and Second World Wars. The Brigade suffered 43,000 casualties during those Wars. In recognition of their distinguished service, the British Gurkha servicemen from Nepal have won 13 Victoria Crosses (VC), the highest British gallantry honour.

The Government of Nepal had made representations to the British Government at various levels to make the benefits and pensions provided to the Gurkha soldiers equitable and just in view of their outstanding contributions to defending Britain and preserving its freedom and liberty.

WELFARE SCHEMES

The British Government has been providing assistance to various Gurkha Welfare Schemes being implemented in different parts of Nepal. It administers, through different Area Welfare Centres in Nepal, welfare activities benefiting the retired British Gurkhas and their dependents.

The Welfare Scheme is financed and sponsored by the Ministry of Defence and the Overseas Development Administration in the UK. It is further supported by certain private charities and trusts, including the Gurkha Welfare Trust (UK), Gurkha Welfare Foundation (USA), Gurkha Welfare Association (Canada) and Kadoorie Agricultural Aid Association (Hong Kong).

Education: Britain has offered a key destination for learning to students and scholars from Nepal since long past. A number of individuals from the civil service and public sector organizations got higher education under the Colombo plan of British government. Apart from that a significant number of students from Nepal go to British Universities under the scholarship programs including Chevenings. The number of students going to UK for study under self-sponsorships increased significantly over the past few years before it slowed down during recent past due to implementation of UK's new education policy.

Diploma Disease: An Acute Problem & Its Remedies

- SHANKER PRASAD PAUDEL:
Immediate Past President, ABAN

WHAT IS DIPLOMA DISEASE ?

Diploma disease is a term rarely used but highly experienced as an acute problem in the contemporary society. The term is developed by Ronald Dore as part of a critique of the excessive reliance on the selection process in formal educational institutions that is on educational qualifications. It is taken as an evidence of ability, training, and merit for entry to particular occupations, careers, or labour-markets. This phenomenon is sometimes referred to as credential inflation. With the firm belief that educational certificates are the key to obtaining the best-paid and most secure jobs, individuals are lured to obtain higher level certificates. Education thereby becomes merely a ritualistic process of accumulating qualifications. This kind of process can also be termed as 'Meritocracy' whereby it is believed that the doors of the prosperity are open only on the merit basis of the educational qualification.

Diploma Disease is highly rampant in the developing countries like ours where job markets are slim and university degrees are taken as a path to reach the mirage of the good jobs. In fact, the quest of mirages are rarely fulfilled but there will be accumulation of qualifications – one degree after another. As a result, the students have to devote time, money and energy and eventually land in frustration.

RESEARCHERS' VIEW

According to some researchers, there is a trend where society believes that people who hold higher education degrees such as bachelors or masters degrees, are the best candidates for a job simply because they have a degree. The term for this is education inflation. Education inflation is the concept that as someone obtains a higher degree or degrees, they will naturally qualify for a higher position in the workforce. This is what keeps a student in school, constantly striving for the highest degree they can get, with the misguided notion that they will stand a far better chance than other applicants who might not have the same degree or degrees. This is not the case in most situations, since actual experience is what an employer is usually looking for. Even if an applicant has degrees, it doesn't mean s/he has the skills or experience necessary for the job. Just going to school/college and collecting degrees without any work place experience, certainly does not guarantee that a student will meet the requirements of the job.

HOW DOES DIPLOMA DISEASE AFFECT SOCIETY?

That's easy but crucial. It falsely creates the idea that degrees are a necessity if a person wants to be a better, and better employed person. It also has negative effects on a society as a whole when employers insist on certain degrees for their applicants, whether or not a degree is truly needed for the job. This forces people who can afford it to go to school and get at least one degree, while those who can't afford or can't get into college are stuck in low paying jobs where a degree isn't required. This is a situation that ultimately causes societal problems and ill feelings toward the wealthy and the college graduate who are employed in the good positions that pay a decent salary.

REMEDIES TO DIPLOMA DISEASE

There are remedial measures to diploma disease, but it means changing the way employers think, and this isn't always an easy thing. It would mean hiring employees and training them in a particular job so they can gain on-the-job experience, rather than assuming a college degree automatically qualifies them for a position. Then, once an employee is working, they could go ahead and get further training in that specific job, rather than getting a degree that means nothing or very little for the job. This is career-oriented schooling that's realistic. It wouldn't affect the colleges, because students would still attend so they could get training in their career. It's just more practical and gives everyone, no matter what social status they are, to work their way up the ladder of employment without making a degree the qualifier for the job. This would require employers changing their thinking that a degree means a person is more intelligent or better suited for a job than a person who doesn't have a degree. Of course, asking people to change their mind about something like this is the difficult part. But if it could be done, there would be better opportunities for everyone, not just a select few.

More importantly, the courses of study in the educational institutions should be designed as per the need of the contemporary employment market. Depending upon the ability and aspiration of the students, there should be open doors vertical and horizontal to choose job market and further study. It would definitely solve the need of the market and of the human resources.

Finally, it should also be regarded that Education has a much broader and deeper meaning; it is not confined to time or space, it is an attitude, a constant search for learning founded on an unquenchable curiosity. An "educated" person is not only someone who knows a great deal, but someone who wishes to learn in any circumstance, who possesses questions, who proves, reflects and assimilates to gain both knowledge and wisdom.

Meet Families Of The Battlefield

A Historical Event in the Britain-Nepal Relation

- PROF. PREM SINGH BASNYAT, PHD:
Ex-Brigadier General & British Chevening Scholar

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs on the issues and topics of national importance and interest have been held and those have been well attended.

Before the Anglo-Nepal War, there was no more India and had more than 560 small states and principalities. The states used to fight against one another. After Prithvi Narayan Shah achieved success in his unification campaign in the east, his youngest son Bahadur Shah expanded Nepal up to Sutlej in the west. Similarly, the East India Company entered India in the course of its expansion of colonialism. It hatched conspiracies to make the Indian states fight among themselves and used the troops against them to bring them under its control.⁵¹ The English were capturing the territory in the northeast while the Nepalese were expanding the territory to the southwest. Since the Nepalese had been ruling over places like Dehra Doon, Bilaspur, Sutlej, Kangada and Kumaon, the English appeared to be very soft and respectful towards the former in the beginning. The English were hatching conspiracies to expand their colonialism. It was because the English had experienced and heard about the consequences of the Gorkha troops and their bravery.

The Yamuna River and Sutlej River were in Nepal, while Ludhiana was under the control of the English. Kangada and Punjab were powerful states. The Kangada fort and King Sansar Chand were Nepalese strong enemies, while Punjab's King Ranjit Singh was a rival of the English. It was difficult for Bada Kaji Amar Singh Thapa to overpower Sansar Chand. English Col. David Ochterlony also had the ambition to defeat Punjab King Ranjit Singh.⁵²

Ludhiana is about 266 miles northwest of Kathmandu. The English wanted to have good relations with Gorkhalis and to know their strengths and weaknesses. Similarly, the Nepalese rulers also wished to have better ties with the English. In such a situation, Bada Kaji Thapa and Col. Ochterlony had a meeting in Nepalese land with the coordination of the Nepalese and the English envoys. As both the sides proposed to covert the meeting into a friendly relation, the friendly ties were established on November 11, 1813. Bada Kaji's son Ramdas and Col. (later Major General) David Ochterlony's son Ochterlony Junior became an intimate friend (Meet in Nepalese language).⁵³ This is a special bonded friendship forged through a ceremony or rituals to keep it lasting for generations. This relation always binds with the religious norms and values and very respectful in Nepalese culture. And the two military commanders were fathers of the close mates.

The straightforward Nepalese were unaware of the conspiracies and shrewdness of the English. From the foundation of the friendly relations, the English launched the Anglo-Nepal War in 1814 and created the history of the Sugauli Treaty in 1816. Thus, the friendship ties (Meeteri Saino) played an important role in Anglo-Nepal diplomatic history and older than the Treaty of Sugauli.

BEGINNING OF THE MEETERI SAINO

Prior to Bhimsen Thapa, Bada Kaji Amar Singh was an army Commander-In-Chief and efficient courtier of the Nepal Palace and skillful governor. So, he was in a state of dilemma due to his self-esteem and the matter of having relations with the English. For organizing a friendly meeting, Ochterlony and his aides were more enthusiastic because the English knew that 'it would be impossible to fight against two separate enemies (Punjab and Nepal) at a time.'⁵⁴

However, Col. Ochterlony himself was willing to meet Amar Singh, which would enhance the latter's pride. Under Bada Kaji Amar Singh, there were many military and non-military aides. In fact, the then army officials used to carry out administrative responsibilities as well. Of them, Sardar Bhakti Thapa, Arjun Thapa, Lakshya Bir Shahi, Rewanta Kunwar, Ramdas Thapa, Sardar Nirvay Singh Thapa, Krishna Munsu, Jamdar Ram Krishna Khatri and Nihil Giri were Kaji Amar Singh's aides.⁵⁵

Khatri and Giri had worked as the envoys for establishing the 'friendly relations'.⁵⁶ Thus, the Bada Kaji held an assembly of the courtiers and decided on the venue and agendas of the meeting.

Taksar was fixed as the venue for the meeting. The place was one day's walk from Aarki Palace. It was one of Nepalese Bahra Thakurai states located in the Sutlej area. On November 11, 1813, Sardar Nirvaya Singh and Krishna Munsu were sent to Col. Ochterlony.⁵⁷ They were also assigned to work as Nepalese envoys in order to bring the team of Ochterlony to Bada Kaji Amar Singh.

On November 9, 1813, Bada Kaji Amar Singh, along with his courtiers and troops, who were carrying some gifts, departed and stayed overnight at Baghat. On the next day, the Nepalese team reached Taksar and waited for Ochterlony to come. On November 10 of the same year, Ochterlony also left his residence at Ludhiana and stayed overnight at Panjor. As per the suggestions of Nepalese representatives Thapa, Munsu and English envoys Bargat Ali Khan and the approval of the two military leaders, the meeting point was fixed in-between Taksar and Panjor.⁵⁸ Both the leaders had to walk one mile each and the venue was in Nepal's soil.

On November 10, leaving all his troops, logistics and courtiers in Panjor, Col. Ochterlony, along with his son Ochterlony Jr., Capt. Bhor Sahib, six elephants, 10 horses and some servants, headed to Taksar. Knowing all that, Amar Singh also left other troops and logistics at a rented house at Taksar. Together with his two sons Ramdas Thapa and Arjun Thapa, Laksha Bir Shahi, Rewant Kunwar and 120 troops, he moved for the destination.⁵⁹ Bada Kaji Thapa and Col. Ochterlony had a meeting and exchanged greetings with each other.

Both sides started fulfilling formalities by praising each other. The clever English lauded Nepalese for their bravery. During the meeting, the political situation of Kangada, Punjab and other kingdoms were discussed and assessed. The Nepalese side clarified, by giving some examples that it did not act against the interest of the English. Bada Kaji Thapa clearly mentioned his intentions. The conclusion of the meeting between the two military leaders was that both of them would remain intimate friends and well-wishers of each other. The objective of the meeting was to let other local kings and kingdoms know the enhanced the Anglo-Nepal relations and have them frightened.⁶⁰

In order to enhance the relations as planned earlier, both the army commanders were to establish affable ties between their sons and exchange fabric turbans.

As Arjun Thapa was more aggressive in nature, he was proposed to have friendly ties with junior Ochterlony. But they looked dissimilar in their age. So, the friendly relations were established between Ramdas Thapa and junior Ochterlony.⁶¹ In the afternoon of November 11, 1813, while changing the turbans, junior Ochterlony offered a shawl, kishap, a crown to be stuck to the turban, a piece of soft Varanasi silk piece, two handkerchiefs and one gold coin to Ramdas, while the latter presented one turban, shawl, kinkhap, kuchin, two fine cotton fabrics, gold coins and one Taji Ghoda (fast running horse) to the former.⁶²

After having established intimacy, Ramdas saluted Col. Ochterlony by offering one gold coin, while junior Ochterlony, who was also carrying a gold coin in his hand, was in a state of confusion. After a while junior Ochterlony held consultations with English envoy Bargat Ali Khan, who told Bada Kaji Amar Singh that since the English sahibs (masters) had yet to salute anybody, he (junior Ochterlony) shall salute his father by presenting the gold coin.⁶³ Having heard that Col. Ochterlony said it was impossible as the Bada Kaji's son saluted him and junior Ochterlony must reciprocate. He also chided his son and got him to salute Amar Singh.⁶⁴

For a moment, Nepalese felt that the English were very arrogant. But terming the behaviours of his son and envoy Khan as 'immature,' Col. Ochterlony resolved the problem tactfully. Then, Bada Kaji Amar Singh presented three sarbags (like deer-headed animal's tails), one live Kasturi (deer musk), nine Binas and 21 Chykhuras (partridges) to the English delegation. A sense of happiness was revealed that the Anglo-Nepal relations were strengthened again. As Col. Ochterlony was about to hand over some goods as presents to Bada Kaji Amar Singh, the latter refused to take them and said, "We won't take gifts as friendship is more than enough."⁶⁵

Following that, the English team returned to Panjor, while the Nepalese delegation came back to Taksar. The courtiers who could not attend the ceremony went to Panjor to meet Col. Ochterlony on November 12, 1813.

There were Sardar Bhakti Thapa, other courtiers and about 12,00 troops. The Nepalese were respected at the meeting.

SELFISHNESS BEHIND FRIENDSHIP TIES

There were many kings and Rajautas in the erstwhile India. They were involved in infighting and they did not have mutual understanding and harmony. By then, the Nepalese troops had captured Kumaon, Musuri, Nainital, Bilaspur and Kangada State, except the Kangada Fort, whereas the English troops, in course of its expansion of imperialism, was capturing the various principalities located in the periphery of Nepal. The English were strong in their troops, weapons and resources and the Nepalese were renowned in war techniques and bravery. Thus, they were like a snake and a scorpion. They did not want each other's intervention in fulfilling their interests. They did not want to fight against the two enemies at a time.

BADA KAJI AMAR SINGH'S FEELINGS

After expanding Nepalese territory up to Sutlej and the Yamuna River, he was unable to advance further because of his continuous war in Kangada. King Sansar Chand was creating obstructions for the Nepalese to capture Kangada. In 1806, Bhimsen Thapa's younger brother Kaji Nayan Singh Thapa was killed as he tried to bring the Kangada fort under control. Then, Amar Singh Thapa kept on encircling the fort for four years.⁶⁶ Despite that, Chand was adamant in his stance.

During the unification battles, the Kangada fort was the palace of Sansar Chand, who was encircled by the Gorkha troops for four years.

One day, Sansar Chand wrote a letter to Bada Kaji Thapa and requested him to grant him a period of 11 days for bringing his queen and residence out the fort. Thapa approved Chand's call and the latter took out his wife and the properties of his residence out of the fort. But one day, he, along with his bodyguards, secretly went out of the fort in women's dress and returned to it together with King of Punjab Ranjit Singh. Thus, knowing that Ranjit was there to help Chand, the Rajautas, who were not happy with Nepal and others who stood in favour of Sansar Chand, joined troops with Chand.⁶⁷ In 1809, Sansar Chand, Ranjit and other Rajautas defeated the Nepalese troops. And the Kangada fort was under the control of Ranjit Singh. Deceived by Sansar Chand, Amar Singh wanted to re-assault the Kangada fort directly. For that, he needed the military help from powerful friend. He had thought that the English would extend their support to him. But the English did not have any intention to help Nepal and did not want to see the presence of the Nepalese in Sutlej and Kangada areas.

With a view to attacking against the Kangada fort again, Amar Singh went to Panjor to meet Col. Ochterlony and sought the help. But Ochterlony said, "It is not good to launch any attack now. You can attack in the hilly regions wherever you like, but we do not extend any assistance to the Sikh (Maharaja Ranjit Singh) and you should not make assault in the plain land."⁶⁸ Amar Singh mentioned it in his letter. Thus, Bada Kaji Thapa did not seem to have reaped any benefit from the friendship ties with the English.

COLONEL DAVID OCHTERLONY'S INTENTIONS

English Col. David Ochterlony was very intelligent and man of soldiership. He had made significant achievement in the Anglo-Nepal War. He was famous for his lip service, but he used to deceive others in practice, but it is a war tactic. That means he would not do what he spoke. During 1812-13, he had several enemies after defeating many Rajautas (rulers of principalities) in India. Those Rajautas used to instigate the people against others and get involved in various terrorist activities by staying in Sutlej, Kumaon and Palpa areas.⁶⁹ Some of the kings and Rajautas had recruited fighters and fought against the English troops and their supporters. During that time, even the weak states, which were not under the English control, would pose threats to the English. King of Punjab Ranjit Singh and Nepalese governor Bada Kaji Amar Singh were a source of threat for the English. Thus, the English wanted to contain the Nepalese threat.

Some nationalists, including Nawab of Rampur Gunla Mohammed Khan, Nawab of Ujareli Awadh Bajir Ali and King of Maisur Tipu Sultan, were defeated by the English. Then, they fled to Nepal. With the help of Nepalese, they wanted to take back their lost states from the English, who were well aware about it. Thus, cashing in on the friendship relations tied with Bada Kaji Amar Singh's son, Col. Ochterlony requested the governor of Palpa Chautara Bam Shah and the Kathmandu Palace through Amar Singh not to allow anyone to promote terrorism against the East India Company in the Nepalese soil.⁷⁰

In a letter addressed to the Government of Nepal, Ochterlony called for arresting and extraditing the kings and Rajautas, who would be against the English or submit their heads to him. The Government of Nepal also issued instructions to its authorities accordingly. Therefore, the English were expanding their colonialism fearlessly in India.

Besides, Ochterlony was well aware that the English had to fight against Nepal in the near future. They had already faced the consequences of the war techniques and bravery of the Nepalese. So, he was looking for a hole to enter Nepal in order to take stock of the actual situation of the Nepalese Army and get mixed up with the Nepalese people.

Bowing down before Bada Kaji Amar Singh through the friendship relations, he was able to open up the door to that end. Thus, the English took advantage of it. Comparing the friendship relations with others, it was a landmark event in Anglo - Nepal diplomatic history. The relationship is also responsible for limiting Nepalese boarder between the Mechi and the Mahakali Rivers. Nepal was great in terms of size following the unification campaign led by King Prithvi Narayan Shah, his daughter-in-law Rajendra Laxmi and youngest son Bahadur Shah and others.

The English were scared of the Gorkhali fighters as they were beaten up and chased away during the time of King Prithvi Narayan. They wanted to take revenge against Nepal.⁷¹

⁷⁰ Ibid.

But it was not a easy task. It is impossible for one nation to take revenge against another nation without knowing the capabilities, behaviours and attitudes of its military troops. Anyway, the MEETERI SAINO helped the English to know Nepalese military strength and weaknesses.

UK Support for Roadside Bio-engineering in Nepal

1. BACKGROUND

The 50 km long Dharan-Dhankuta Road was constructed between 1977 to 1983 under the UK Government's overseas aid programme to the Government of Nepal. The road alignment passes through geotechnically challenging part of the lower Himalayas. After few years of completion, a M6.6 earthquake occurred in this area on 21 August 1988 with epicentre in Udayapur District about 65 km west of Dharan. Three weeks after the earthquake in September 1988, a intense monsoon rainfall caused extensive damage to this newly build road due to flooding and landslides. The 24 hour rainfall recorded in Dharan was 160 mm, most of which fell within a few hours. Road remedial and maintenance works were undertaken incorporating innovative bio-engineering techniques from 1988 onwards. Extensive research was carried out and different types of bio-engineering techniques were developed. Many bio-engineering sites were established along the road to control landslides and erosion. The large part of bio-engineering experiences on the Dharan-Dhankuta Road is documented by Howell (1999) in a reference manual and site handbook on roadside bio-engineering in Nepal.

2. BIO-ENGINEERING

Bio-engineering is the use of plants in combination with normal geotechnical structures used to reduce slope instability. Spoil management, slope grade, drainage systems and the use of stabilization measures are important factors to be considered during road construction to cope with the landslides in roadside slopes. Road construction causes widespread damage to vegetation and other adverse environmental consequences. Frequent road blockages due to landslides have increased transportation and road maintenance costs. It is obvious from all previous experience of highway engineering the hills of Nepal, that the absence of surface protection leads to a significant loss of investment and considerably raised recurring maintenance burden. Slope stabilisation which involves costly civil structures can be made more cost effective using locally available materials and skills. Bio-engineering is considered suitable for Nepal because it offers comprehensive solutions to a wide range of slope instability problems when combined with appropriate civil engineering measures. The wider use of bio-engineering was identified as one of a number of ways of reducing these costs and problems (eg Kappeler, 1984; Schaffner, 1987).

3. BIO-ENGINEERING TECHNIQUES

Bio-engineering techniques which were introduced from other countries have been found to be too expensive, or to be either too weak or entirely inappropriate on the steep, unstable middle mountain slopes with the high monsoon rain intensities. The techniques developed in Nepal are simple and labour intensive. The plants are easily available in the locality. Bio-engineering process also provides jobs and income generation opportunities to the local people. The techniques used are found suitable to protect slopes against erosion, to reduce instances of shallow planar sliding, to improve surface drainage and reduce slumping. The use of indigenous large grass species, planted in different configurations, is becoming a highly effective means to control erosion and slope hydrology. Timely application of Bio-engineering measures is critical to grow during rainy season. Works should be implemented in the early monsoon season to help the vegetation growth and to prevent the risk of instability and slope failures in the near future.

Since the effective rooting depth of plant is less than 2 metre, deep seated instability problems are addressed by geotechnical engineering measures and only swallow failures can be treated by bio-engineering technique. Selection of the bio-engineering technique depends on function required, propagation and site suitability. A more comprehensive assessment of the technical aspects of bio-engineering in Nepal is given in the Roadside Bio-engineering Manuals (Howell, 1999).

4. BIO-ENGINEERING IN UK FUNDED ROADS

4.1 Eastern Region Road Maintenance Project (ERRM)

The present roadside bio-engineering techniques emerged from the research and major trials on the Dharan-Dhankuta road and Daune Hills of East-West Highway. During the major trials on Dharan-Dhankuta road in east Nepal, a number of methods were identified as the optimum solutions on specific sites (Eastern Region Road Maintenance Project, 1993).

4.2 Road Maintenance Project (RMP)

Bio-engineering component under Geo-Environment Unit was supported by the British funded Road Maintenance Project (RMP). Outputs of the RMP Bio-Engineering Component were as below:

- Improvement of skills in bio-engineering was done by training and demonstration.
- Expansion of the capabilities of Nepalese consultants and contractors to apply bio-engineering through training and encouragement of the private sector.
- Introduction of bio-engineering works in programs by all Division Road Offices.

- Provision of guidelines for roadside management with road neighbours in rural areas.
- Development of rate analysis norms, standard specifications and technical manuals.
- Determination of long term management requirements for roadside vegetation.

4.3 Rural Access Programmes (RAP)

RAP1 was implemented during 2001-08. A feeder road was constructed from Hile to Bhojpur and upgrades were completed from Basantapur to Myanglung and to Khadbari. RAP 1 used extensive Bio-engineering and Innovative methods of community participation were developed. The second phase of the Rural Access Programme (RAP2) commenced in October 2008 and was completed in September 2013. It focused on constructing District Roads adopting bio-engineering and the community-based construction methods. RAP3 also includes the scope of Bio-engineering and tree planting activity in the down slopes to provide a natural safety barrier against vehicular roll-off.

5. CONCLUSIONS

Bio-engineering techniques which are developed from UK supported road projects in Nepal have been proved more sustainable for road maintenance. They are the cost effective way to protect slopes against erosion and shallow landslides on the scale required for Himalayan hill roads. The techniques can be combined with civil engineering structures to enhance strength, drainage and slope stability. Bio-engineering process can produce better economic and environmental results for roadside management. The use of bio-engineering technique has now become popular for the slope stabilisation and landslide management in the hill roads of Nepal.

BACKGROUND

Tourism industry has experienced continued expansion and diversification, becoming one of the most rapidly developing industries in the world. As a result of the enhanced transportation facilities and additional disposable income allocated to travel expenses, together with the improving level of satisfaction of the tourists, as well as competition between the tourist-receiving countries this industry has been growing increasingly to obtain the highest share from the expanding international tourism market. At the end of the 1950s, global tourist arrivals were reported at just over 69 million, however, with the commercial development of jet aircraft, coupled with an increasingly affluent global population in many places, especially in the West, resulted in and accelerated growth in international travel, decade by decade, to pass the one-billion milestone in 2012 and reaching 1186 million by the end of 2015 (UNWTO, 2016) Figure 1.

Similarly, Asia has also witnessed strong growth in international tourist arrivals (ITA) especially since China opened to the world in 1978 and began to exert its influence on the global travel phenomenon. Collectively, the destinations of Asia reported reaching 100 million ITAs for the first time in 1996. In 2005, the number was approaching 154 million and by the close of last year had reached close to 279.2 million arrivals (Figure 2).

Likewise, ITAs into South Asia, according to UNWTO data, have risen from just over four million in 1995 to more than 18 million by the end of 2015. As a consequence of this growth, South Asia's share of ITAs into Asia has also risen consistently. Tourism has continued to be a critical sector in both advanced and developing economies for economic development, poverty alleviation and sustaining employment. A strong tourism sector contributes in many ways to development and the economy. It makes both direct contributions, by raising the national income and improving the balance of payments, and indirect contributions, via its multiplier effect and by providing the basis for connecting countries, through hard and soft infrastructure—attributes that are also critical for a country's general economic competitiveness. Based on the information from countries with data available, the World Travel & Tourism Council (WTTC, 2016) estimated that tourism's contribution directly to worldwide gross domestic product (GDP) was 9.8% in 2015. With direct and indirect effects of more than 185 supply-side economic activities that have significant connections to tourism, its contribution to GDP is 9.8%, a total of US$7.2 trillion, and it provides 284 million jobs in related industries equivalent to 1 in 11 jobs in the global economy. According to the WTTC, it is estimated that travel and tourism sector have created 283,578,000 jobs in 2015, with US$774.6 billion in investment. Since tourism affects transportation, hotels and lodging, food and beverage, cultural and entertainment, banking and finance and promotion and publicity services, tourism's contribution to employment tends to be slightly higher and is estimated in the order of 6-7% of the overall number of jobs or one in 11 jobs globally (UNWTO, 2016). According to the WTTC, this ratio could even rise to one in ten jobs by 2022.

The contribution of tourism to economic well-being depends on the quality and the revenues of the tourism offer. UNWTO assists destinations in their sustainable positioning in ever more complex national and international markets. As the UN agency dedicated to tourism, UNWTO points out that particularly developing countries stand to benefit from sustainable tourism and acts to help make this a reality.

HOW NEPALESE TOURISM MATTERS BRITISH VISITORS

Total international arrivals in Nepal for 2012 have been registered as the highest figure 03,092 persons with an increase of 9.1% over 2011 and 57% increase from 2009 (509,956). However, in 2015 due to massive earthquake and economic blockade, Nepal received only 538,970 with a decrease of 32% over 2014 (790,118). As usual, in 2015 also, Nepal experienced considerable mix in arrivals, followed by Asia accounting over half (57%) of all international visitors with average length of stay as 13.16 days (Table 1).

meters peaks (MoCTCA 2015). The government of Nepal has authorized NMA to issue permit for 33 peaks of between 5587 and 6654 meters in the areas of Manang, Annapurna, Langtang and Khumbu region (NMA, 2012).

History reveals that the formal tourism relationship was depicted since the Treaty of Sugauli in March 1816 with frequent visits by then British officials to Nepal for recreation purposes followed by Jang Bahadur Rana becoming the first Nepalese leader to visit the UK in 1850. Likewise, Chandra Shamser's visit to the UK in 1908 kept up the momentum.

The timeline in Figure 3 shows the main events that

Similarly, India traditionally contributed the largest share (13.94%) of international arrivals (due to its geographic proximity and strong cultural ties) followed by China (12.43%) and Sri Lanka (8.23%) respectively. The Indian market share, however, has declined from its 1999 peak of one third of total arrivals (33.4%) to 23.2% in 2013. With almost 180,974 arrivals in 2013 (all by air as land arrivals are not recorded), India remains a major generating market for Nepal (MoCTCA, 2015). Other main source markets for Nepal in 2015 in order of size are USA (42,687), UK (29,730), Thailand (30,953), and Republic of Korea (18,112). Most Sri Lankans (97.5%) and Thais (86%) are arriving by land to visit Lumbini with short stays (4.07 days for Sri Lankan and 6.40 days for Thai) and generally with low spend patterns. These figures are quite below than the national average stay of 13.16 days. However, British are arriving by air (94.7%) with high spending and long stays (17.91 days, which is higher than the national average of 13.16 days) patterns including high number of visitors for mountaineering and expedition. In 2015 only, UK mountaineers paid USD 40,690 to Nepal Mountaineering Association (NMA) as peak royalty to climb less than 6700 meters high peaks together with an additional royalty to the Department of Tourism for 229 climbers for expedition to summit over 6654 launched tourism in Nepal in 1950s, at when the mountaineering pioneers were the first to travel to Nepal to scale the peaks and set-up tourism businesses. Nepal's first genuine trekking tourist was the great mountain explorer Bill Tilman who was born near Liverpool, UK in 1898 (NTSP, 2015). However, George Mallory, who attempted to climb Mt. Everest for the first time died climbing in 1924 and whose body was only recently been found. Likewise, Sir Edmund Hillary of New Zealand and Tenzing Norgay Sherpa of Nepal reached the 29,035-foot summit of Everest on May 29, 1953, becoming the first people to stand atop the world's highest mountain through the British expedition led by John, Lord Hunt.

The concept of modern tourism management in Nepal was developed in 1957 with set up of 'Tourist Office' in the Department of Industry following the establishment of a Tourist Development Board under the same Department in 1956. In 1959 the office was upgraded to department level. Under the Tourism Act of 1964 an advisory committee for tourism has been set up in 1968. Only a year later the committee has been replaced by the Nepal Tourism Development Committee. With these two institutions, the nucleus of the management of tourism activities has begun with the committee functioning as policy-making and the Department of Tourism as an operating agency.

Then State, swiftly realising the economic advantage of international tourism, began to pay it some attention and to introduce specific legislation. For better management, government of Nepal amended the Tourism Act in 1978. Mountaineering Expedition Regulations 1979 brought into force for the promotion, co-ordination and planning of the mountain tourism. Likewise, Trekking and River Rafting Regulation have found to be brought into force in 1984.

Planning of Tourism in Nepal starts with the National Development Plan. The government has realised the importance of tourism and has identified possibilities and has built some infrastructure for tourism development in the First National Development Plan (1955-60). The Second National Development Plan (1962-65) signifies with the first tourist legislation to bring into force, and start recording tourist data both in 1962. However, no one study supports the substantial growth of tourism in Nepal during that time. But, only from the Third National Development Plan period (1965-70), owing to dramatic change on tourist arrivals, Nepal started modernisation of external air services and encouraged private sector to establish hotel industry extending substantial credit through government financing institution Nepal Industrial Development Corporation (NIDC).

The first framework for government planning on tourism was the Tourism Master Plan of 1972. The project and programmes recommended by this Master Plan has seen to incorporate in the fourth (1970-75) and fifth (1975-80) National Development Plans. In order to develop tourism in a planned way, the Master Plan for Tourism listed proposals to be carried out during a ten year period from 1972. The Hotel Management and Tourism Training Centre (HMTTC) have been established in 1972 to produce trained manpower for tourism industry. Above all, separate Ministry of Tourism has been set up in 1977. In 1978 a high level Tourism Co-ordination Committee was formed to co-ordinate promotion and development activities and to review the Master Plan for Tourism.

The basic objectives laid by government in these national development plans include - regional balance of tourism development; exploration of new attractive spots; participate actively in the meetings of different international organs and promote Nepal's attractions; follow liberal policy on entry formalities; and above all the most important was the preservation of natural, cultural and aesthetic beauties of the country, and to safeguard the environment from pollution.

However, there has not been significant growth in tourist arrivals during Sixth plan period (1980-85). Therefore, in 1982, the government contrived another high level National Tourism Promotion Committee to review the decline of tourist arrivals which Nepal experienced in 1981. Moreover, during Seventh Plan (1985-90) the tourists inflow in Nepal increased and government become more aware of the opportunities which tourism can provide, and did take the positive step to encourage the development of the industry. In 1986, the British consulting firm WS Atkins International in association with Green Belfield Smith and Company of Surrey, UK made a feasibility study for International Standard Tara Gaon Cultural Tourism Center which now is running as Hyatt Regency Hotel at Baudha, Kathmandu.

Furthermore, the new tourism development programme as the second frame work for government planning, was prepared by London based Touche Ross Management Consultants in association with the Surry University (UK) in 1990, has become the guideline on formulating tourism development activities in the Eighth National Plan. Thus, Nepal's Seventh Plan (1985 – 90) represents as the first attempt to formulate a distinct tourism programme with a long term prospective for equitable socio-economic distribution. Subsequently, this became one of the major objectives of the Eight Plan (1992 – 97) and the Ninth Plan (1997 – 2002) too. Consequently, the rural tourism approach in Nepal took a momentum in a planned approach making it being relatively new paradigm for the Nepalese tourism industry.

The policies and strategies of the Ninth Plan (1997 – 2002) together with the introduction of DFID/UNDP/ SNV funded Tourism for Rural Poverty Alleviation Programme (TRPAP), NEP/99/013 aimed at achieving broad-based growth and providing basic social services to address various aspects of poverty, succeeding to reach large segments of the rural community, notably the poorest of the poor and marginalized groups. As a result, then the government tried to tackle poverty through simultaneous strategies: broad-based economic growth; social sector development; and a set of targeted programs within the Tenth Plan (2002 – 2007) and Interim Plan (2008 – 2010) as well. Likewise, in new Tourism Policy 2008 and Tourism Vision 2020 new directives charted to overcome the problems of endemic poverty, unemployment, regional imbalances and economic and social deprivation, and have set up a long-term perspective and twenty-year growth targets (HMG, 1997, 2002, 2003 and GON 2007, 2009).

SOME OF THE MAJOR BRITISH ASSISTED TOURISM DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

In order to disseminate tourism benefits at the community level and to develop tourism in a sustainable way, British Cooperation are seen initiating to work closely with the rural communities. There are several tourism projects which has been completed and some are still underway in Nepal at national and local level under British assistance. Important initiatives include, among others:

- Tourism for Rural Poverty Alleviation Programme (TRPAP) – UNDP, SNV, Department for International Development (DFID) (2001 to 2007) is an example of a programme that used community-based sustainable rural tourism activities as its means to reduce poverty. The programme encouraged and involved grassroots people in the decision making process, to help ensure that benefits from tourism can reach the rural poor.

- Marketing Assistance for Sustainable Tourism Products (MAST Nepal) – UNEP/DTIE, SNV Nepal, NTB and Leeds Metropolitan University (2008 to 2009). The Marketing Assistance to Nepal for Sustainable Tourism Products project was designed to build capacity within the Nepal tourism industry on concepts of sustainable tourism, assisted project companies in developing action plans to increase product sustainability to the European sustainable tourism market.

- The Great Himalayan Trail (GHT), a government project supported by DFID, SNV, and ICIMOD to develop two trails along the Himalayas (upper and lower) and the tourism areas adjoining the routes and now promoted through the Tourism Component of SAMARTH - Nepal Market Development Programme (NMDP)(2012 to 2016). This programme worked closely with the tourism industry, NGOs and host communities to ensure that the GHT is managed in line with responsible tourism best practices, generating vital jobs and income for local communities along the trail and contributing to the conservation of the country's natural and cultural heritage.

- Finalisation of the National Tourism Strategy & Action Plan 2014 – 2023. Samarth-NMDP, as requested by the Ministry of Culture, Tourism and Civil Aviation, provided technical services to finalise the National Tourism Strategic Plan by facilitating a consultation process with the relevant stakeholders enabling the inclusion of comments and observations on the draft document.

Such projects with emphasis on various ecotourism activities have established a new frontier in the Nepalese tourism history by empowering local people to get involved in sustainable tourism development through community based ecotourism and thus helping to eradicate poverty from rural areas. These projects have accumulated vast institutional knowledge on safeguarding tourism and environment as well. There is a good opportunity to spread these good practices for sustainable tourism development in Nepal. Thanks to Nepal Britain Cooperation for such valuable endeavours by which Nepal has been able to harness such an extensive community participation in the tourism sector through a variety of channels – local community groups, Village and District Committees, national NGOs and others.

We can't change History but definitely can shape up Future

- TULASI PRASAD UPRETY
Immediate Past President, ABAN

During 1996/1997, when I was studying MSC at the University of Manchester, I had a brief visit to Liverpool city in England. I had a very nice experience of visiting National Museums Liverpool, including a section on History of Slavery, which by now has been turned into a full-fledged Museum named "International Slavery Museum".

British history during 17th to early 20th century was famous for not only being a colonialist empire but also how it has treated human being by capturing, enslaving and using slaves in war, production and for entertainment forcefully. In other words, it was the history of forceful mass migration of people and denial of human rights of peoples mostly from Africa.

After the Slavery section of the Museum, I have my present day opinion on British people's physic on this brutal history- people from Britain went to various African countries, capturing able bodied persons, mostly male with some exception, carrying them, train them for desired work and finally to get work done from them. Along with it they also used coercive methods to make them silent if there was some form of dissenting behavior. There were pictorials, statues, boats that carried peoples from Africa and equipment used to bring these peoples etc.

While walking through the museum, I was following a English lady, who was there with their two kids, explaining them about this notorious historical activity their fore fathers had done. The growing kids were very enthusiastic on every aspect of the Meseum. That was giving me also some insight and thoughtful experiences. Whlie moving ahead we were in front of a replica of large boat, which was used at some point of History as a tool of Slavery. This boat had two levels. The basement was made for around 100 slaves to be seated in a row facing same direction clamped in legs, arms, stomach, chest and neck so that they can not scape but can row the boat with hands and feet. The upper floor was meant for English male and females travelling to French side from English Channel. The slaves were supposed to row the boat creating harmony in action together to drive the boat. This way large boats were run in those ages of not having automation. In the upper level English men and women used to have the best wine and food available. They used to dance amidst the soft English music, hand in hand, kissing each other when ever they feel like enjoying a heavenly travel to France in their life time to bring more wine and dairy products which the French were and are famous for.

The tour guide was telling this history on a stereotyped voice, as all guides do, the same many times a day and years, without any sensitivity. But the kids of the English lady were very enthusiastic to know how could you do such things, what happened to these human beings etc. Suddenly the English lady became very serious. Her face looked like crying. She then told her kids: Baby listen I have taken you to this Museum to let you know the history of our ancestors. Whether it is good or bad every one have to judge. But History is History and we cannot go back and change. This Museum has been created to let you know what had happened in the past and what lessons can be learnt. Based on the lesson learnt you can act to shape the future. What is the future of mankind then? The kids asked their mom. She said the future of mankind is equality, equal opportunity, trust, caring and sharing. No one is different inside. The feelings of every human being are the same, they are: Love, caring and sharing. Technology may have changed the way of working, moving etc. But we, who have knowledge and resources, have lot of responsibilities. We have to help and support the other people who do not have enough access to resources. That is why our government now a days supports developing countries in the path of their development. We pay taxes for that.

By this time I was very much exited to ask a question to the lady. Finally, I said to her: Madam I am from a developing country, although never colonized. But we had lots of fights with the then British India before having a final deal in 1816. After that our people, as you know them as "Gurkhas" are serving in British army till now. Many developing country people think even today's developed nation's aids and grants are conditional. In that way people consider politics of AID as some form of neo colonialism. In this situation how can we make a bright future? She yelled a little and said: That is the reason we the tax payers always try to elect best representative so that they use our hard earned money to the best interest. But you know politicians make governments. They are the same everywhere as we people are also the same. She also said that she is not interested in active politics. But said that we can not think of a society without government, that means without politicians. But we have to be very careful about their activities. Otherwise they may indulge in the way we do not desire. There must be a check and balance in the system.

All countries need to be aware on their needs, relationship with other groups, be fair and transparent so that we can grow together.

My memory of a short discussion with the lady with kids at the Museum where history of slavery was being presented to all people of this generation was very touching. The first thing I felt at that time was that an English mother taking her kids to such museum and telling them that ancestors have committed heinous crime against humanity at some point of history itself was unexpectedly full of excitement. And the most touching part was when she said: "History is History: We can not go back and change. What we can do now is learn from the experience and work for making bright future".

My interaction with the British would not have complete if I did not have visited the Museum and even if visited did not have met the lady with kids.

Plenty fish

- BHISMA UPRETI

Immediate Past President, ABAN

The vehicle couldn't go forward as we reached Rimna in Jajarkot. We crossed the Sani Bheri River by the suspension bridge along with our backpacks. Finally, we got a jeep in Khotare. It took us up to Chisapani Market. We had to walk further along the roads by the riverside. The flow of water, the sound of splash as it collided on the rocks and the white suds it produced, the greeneries around: all of this was enough to blow minds away. Whether it is river or ocean, their shore always seemed to attract me in a very strange way.

Travelling new places do not only enhance the geographical knowledge but also enrich us with the economic, social and cultural backgrounds of the local community. I believe learning things this way is more sustainable. Thus, I set out to visit places as soon as I get time.

Rameshji and me moved ahead. Rameshji is my colleague at office, but, he has more introduction than this. He was a national shooting player long ago. He had participated in some international competition of shooting as a player from Nepal. Photography is his another interest. I do not have any worry of taking photograph when I have Rameshji's company in travel. Likewise, he does dubbing and editing work in the computer. Having Watched the documentary of the life of famous runner of Nepal Hari Bahadur that he made jointly with his friends, I realized that how deep love Rameshji has for the life. These are the reasons that I have chosen Rameshji in this travel.

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained in the United Kingdom. Various talk programs attended.

The time was high for autumn to get started. Sky was clear blue. Clouds were there with variations in shapes and places. Yet, the slopes did make us sweat. It made us feel as if the sun was scorching hot and this sensation was inevitable.

We reached near Kalimati. Nalsinghagad River had parted the Kalimati and Dalli bazaar from middle. Dalli bazaar seemed livelier. On the other side, Kalimati seemed more secluded and quiet in spite of having Badi communities dwelling there.

Down the village I heard some hustle-bustle. As the river flowed broadly, the bank was wide. I asked Ramesh Ji to wait for a while as I came down to the bank. I could see few people wandering over. There were kids, youth and some middle aged people; both male and female.

I wanted to talk to them so I approached them.

"What's your name?" I asked to a boy who was about 10 years old and was there assisting to catch some fish. He wore a pair of old half-pant and dirty t-shirt.

"Ram Bahadur", he replied.

"Don't you like going to school?" I asked Ram Bahadur.

"I do," he said.

"Then why you didn't?" I asked again.

"I am already enrolled but, I don't have time to attend school," he said.

"How do you study then?" I asked.

"Sir, will get us passed," he bluntly replied.

He went back to his own pace. Seeing him I thought, Passing didn't mean acquiring some skills or gaining knowledge for them. Where would this sort of education lead where passing just meant enrollment in a school

Who would they compete with? How would they gain success? Even for practical knowledge to be beneficial it must be regular and subsequent. None of that was found here.

A boy who stood beside Ram Bahadur was attentively listening to us, I asked him "Where is your school?"

He pointed towards the other side of the river showing Dalli Bazaar and said, "Up there in the market."

I wished to see the school and visit their teacher. If favorable I would surely, I contemplated.

A man was carefully listening to our conversations. I glanced at him. He wore a torn half-shirt and trousers. He carried fishing net in his hand. He had his trousers folded up to his knees. He smiled. There was not any kind of attraction or hypnotism in his smile. Yet, I carefully noticed him.

"How much fish do you usually catch?" I asked.

"How much to say....Sometimes plenty and sometimes its worthless," he prompted.

"Do you earn subsistence by fishing?" I asked again.

"We have no idea for other works. Neither we have money nor do we possess any skill. We do not even have field to yield crops. There's no other option." His helplessness was like a dark-sky; eternal and incurable. "Send these children to school. They would learn something and ignite a spark out of it. That spark would be enough for them to enlighten their path for future." I explained.

"Yes it is. But education is not in our fate. If all members of the family do not engage in fishing neither we get anything to eat nor any cloth to cover us up." He defended.

I read in a paper that the place was very lucrative for "Chiuri"(butter tree). Honey could be extracted from it. I then responded, "Why don't you try bee-keeping. Chiuri-honey is very good."

"We do not have enough money to buy bee and hive. We do not have any idea about it, where to get or how to get it. How can we do something that was never done by our forefathers", he replied.

Illiteracy and ignorance can darken the human life even in the brightest day. I realized as I talked with these fishermen.

I didn't have much left to say or any assurance to give. A man becomes dull when he loses his words and voice. I turned dull at that very moment. I looked over the man again, the woman beside him who was busy with her net to catch some fish and those small kids. I feared for the dark future of those kids. Their darker future wouldn't only encompass them.

I had moved with the excitement of meeting new people, visiting new places, learning new things. However, I ended up feeling dark as if there were an eclipse in a bright day. As if black patches were dancing before my eyes. My legs were numb and steady. I gazed over those unfortunate kids.

I closed my eyes and prayed, "may they catch plenty fish, as plenty fish as they can..., every day."

I came back to Ramesh ji. We went to Dalli Bazaar on the other side.

Dalli bazaar: There were houses lined up in both sides of the street. Each house had a shop. Some were grocery, some hotels, tea-shops and bars. There were health posts and police-station too. Also there was some houses under-construction.

We went inside a tea-shop. There were 3 middle-aged men busy in their discussion. The 3 empty cups in a table just before them made it quite evident that they already had had their tea.

We casually introduced ourselves. One of the three was the teacher who enrolled Ram Bahadur. His name was Ashok Neupane. I was happy meeting him but I restrained that happiness within me. I started talking about the fishermen I met on the way. I also conveyed what Ram Bahadur said. Ashok Sir just smiled slyly.

"They belong to Badi community. Across Nalsinghagad in Kalimati Bazaar there are about 16 Badi families. They do not own any land. They are poor, neither are they educated and nor can they get jobs in offices. Therefore they earn their living through fishing. Fishing is their main occupation." he responded.

"Do you pass those kids even without getting them to school?" I asked him.

"What am I to do, sir?? They won't be coming back, if I fail them. I hope, they might get to learn something if they come to school at least once in a while." He replied. The goodness of these teachers is immense. However, in long term, it will push these innocent children towards even colossal darkness.

Poverty deprives a person from dreaming. Badi community is just an illustration of how poverty engulfs the future of a person. There are many such examples in Nepal. Social values and behavior constructively thrives poverty. On traditional grounds, the unequal opportunity on resources and discrimination escalates poverty. The country came across radical changes. But none of these have seemed to impact the lives of people who are based to grounds. Whether it is Monarchy or republic, these people's lives revolve around thinking about their very morning, day, evening and their next day. Neither can they see their lives beyond that nor do they possess any dream, which can soar higher and higher with colorful wings.

May be I stood silent for a long time. Ramesh ji who came along with me spoke, "Where are you lost, Sir??" I jolted suddenly. I said, "Can't we make arrangements for educating at least few of these Badi children?" "Yes, we can, but that's not the permanent solution. There were about ten to twelve children down the river. Who are we to choose and whom to leave behind?" Ramesh ji replied.

We may not be able to build the whole house but at least we can add some bricks to it, I thought.

I took mobile number of Ashok Neupane Sir. We had had our tea by the time. "Aren't we leaving?" Ramesh ji asked.

We stood. I didn't want to go further. Those Badi kids were running through my mind. The day was about to fall. The sun was leaning towards west.

We returned our way back. Sometimes we were on jeep and other times on our feet.

A jeep was waiting for us in Rimna.

The wavy and narrow roads of the hill were full of dust. As the jeep moved ahead I looked back through the window. But the dust had covered the roads we left, the trees on the both sides, the people walking by us. We could see none of it.

Introduction to Summer School in the UK

- UTTAM PRASAD PANT
General Secretary, ABAN

SUMMER AND CULTURAL EXCHANGE PROGRAMME IN THE UK

While the education standard and quality in Nepal has come a very long way over the past decade with numerous schools in Nepal offering curriculums of the international standard, the education in Nepal is still heavily focused in book-based learning. International education destinations around the world, for the past few decades, have emphasized the importance of task-based and skills-based learning in lieu of simply book-based learning. Hands on learning techniques not only foster deeper and more prolonged understanding of the subject material, but also foster the development of important soft skills such presentation skills, academic debate and professional writing skills.

Prestigious education institutions around the world often have short duration programmes for middle school and high school students from around the world. These programmes are intended to give students a flavor of modern learning practices often used in these institutions. These include summer programmes in the University of Cambridge in the UK, Tufts University in the USA and other institutions. These summer programmes are typically two weeks in duration and cater to students of various age-groups, with most programmes focusing on ages 13-18. These programmes are usually based on specific themes such as university preparation, English language advancement, leadership development, and international language learning among others. While focusing on these specific themes, these summer programmes engage students in various hands on learning experiences in a diverse learning environment. The exposure students get in these summer programmes will help them work on their soft-skills and offer them an opportunity to work with people with backgrounds and interests very different from theirs.

Along with enhancing the soft-skills of the participants, these summer programmes also provide a unique opportunity for students to explore the history, traditions and culture of the host country. Almost all summer programmes in the UK have designated time set aside for excursions in various areas of thematic interest all around the country. These excursions further help students in becoming more informed global citizens and broaden their horizons. Many of these sites serve to provide a unique vision to the students in their areas of interest. An added bonus to attending these excursions involved having the opportunity to tour many touristic centers in the host country/city.

been working steadily to develop its role in providing a forum for the networking of a vast number of Nepalese professionals trained.

Bearing in mind the gaps present in the education system in Nepal and the pivotal role international summer programmes play to bridge those gaps, these summer programmes would be an interesting and rewarding experience for Nepali students to explore. The exposure provided by these programmes will not only help students broaden their intellectual horizons but also help them become competent global citizens. I was honored to be part of a pilot programme in which 16 middle school students from Rajarshi Gurukul School were taken to a 2 week winter programme in Cambridge Melchior College in the UK. By the end of the 2 weeks, every student in the group seemed to have improved their language skills, were much more confident in executing their soft skills and had made memories that would last them a lifetime. This testified to the strength of these international programmes and the significance it can have in educating our children for the future.
